PREFACE.

MUCH of the matter in this volume is based, in large measure, on the corresponding publication of a decade ago. The old historical sketch of the University has been rearranged to some extent; a few minor points, formerly omitted, have been introduced, and such other insertions and additions have been made as were necessary to bring the whole down to date.

The historical sketches of the professional departments and of the schools of the academic department were prepared by the heads of these departments and schools.

The biographical sketches of the presidents and chancellors of the University have been taken, in the main, from recent University periodicals. The first six appeared in the University of Mississippi Magazine in 1902, and were from the pen of Professor Dabney Lipscomb. The sketch of ex-Chancellor Fulton was published in the College Annual, "Ole Miss," in 1907. That of Chancellor Kincannon, with additions made later by the editor of this book, appeared in the Annual of the following year. This last was also from Professor Lipscomb.

The register of officers and students closes with the session of 1908-9.

Mr. J. E. Calhoun and Mr. D. N. Powers, Secretaries to the Chancellor, had charge of the work of revising the lists of names contained in the Historical Catalogue of 1899 and of preparing the additional list embracing all students who have attended the University since that time. Those Chancery Court clerks who rendered valuable assistance in this matter of compiling statistics in regard to former University students residing in their counties are entitled to sincere thanks.

It has been found advisable to arrange the names of students first in the order of their entrance into the University, and by classes, and also to give a complete alphabetical list. The dates in this index refer to one year in which the student was enrolled in the University, and will serve as a guide to further information recorded in that part of the catalogue corresponding to the year shown.

In the general catalogue of former students, it has been attempted to give the present address of all who are living. While this has been accomplished in many instances, it has been found impossible to locate a large number. The prefix "Hon." is used in its common sense to indicate one who has been a member of the Legislature; other abbreviations will be readily understood. The duplication of names is intentional when the first record shows the entrance of the student and the second his graduation. It is believed that this arrangement of names in reference to years of attendance is more satisfactory to those who will read the list than any other order.

It is an unfortunate but unavoidable feature of work of this kind that the facts gathered by correspondence are those relating to such accomplishments of individuals as have brought them prominently before the public eye. While many are thus mentioned as having achieved distinction, it should be carefully borne in mind that there are hundreds of names in this catalogue belonging to those who have done their life work in the noblest manner, and who as citizens and as patriots are worthy of the highest praise, and yet whose taste or inclination has kept them from seeking public positions. Many of these have devoted themselves with the greatest success to private business, as planters, merchants, physicians, lawyers, teachers, in whose eminent success in these lines the University properly takes as much pride as in the achievements of those of her sons who have won more conspicuous positions.

The University of Mississippi.

HISTORICAL SKETCH.

ONE of the last acts of the old Continental Congress was the passage of the bill which became a law on July 13, 1787, and which has become celebrated in the history of public education and otherwise as the "ordinance of 1787 for the government of the Northwest Territory." The third of the six articles of compact forming a part of the ordinance foreshadowed the policy of the Federal Government, and that of the States to be formed out of the territory to which the ordinance related, in reference to education, in the statement that "religion, morality and knowledge, being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged."

By the Act of May 20, 1790, Congress extended the general provisions of the ordinance of 1787 to the Mississippi territory, and by the Act of March 3, 1815, reserved from sale, for the support of common school education, the sixteenth section of every township of land, and one entire township for the use of a seminary of learning in this territory, which included the district now covered by the States of Alabama and Mississippi. By the Act of February 20, 1819, the State of Mississippi received in lieu of the township just referred to, another single township; "vested in the Legislature of the said State, in trust, for the support of a seminary of learning therein."

The principles stated in the ordinance of 1787 became national policy. To every State formed out of the public domain Congress has granted, in carrying out the spirit of this ordinance, lands for the support of common schools and a seminary of learning or university.

The State of Mississippi received thus one section in every township for common schools, and ONE township for the support of a seminary of learning—the one received under the Act of Congress of February 20, 1819.

These grants have been uniformly made to the State or its Legislature, in trust, for the purpose intended, and in the case of every State and Territory formed out of the public domain already, and in the case of each being formed, the Acts of Congress have been so framed as to secure to each State clearly, without incumbrance of any kind, not less than two townships of public land for the support of a seminary of learning or university, excepting only the State of Mississippi, which under the original Act received but one.

The Act of Congress making the first grant for a seminary of learning to the State of Mississippi is dated February 20, 1819, and its wording is peculiar. After the usual grant for a seat of government comes—

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That in addition to the township of land granted for the support of Jefferson College, there shall be granted in the said State another township, or a quantity of land equal thereto, to be located in tracts of not less than four entire sections each, which shall be vested in the Legislature of the said State, in trust, for the support of a seminary of learning therein. * * * * *

The expression "in addition to the township of land granted for the support of Jefferson College," suggests that Congress thought when this act was passed that Jefferson College was an institution belonging to the State of Mississippi. As a matter of fact, Jefferson College was a private corporation chartered in the Mississippi Territory in 1802. To this private corporation, by Act dated March 3d, 1803, Congress had donated one township of land. This land had been located on the Tombeckbee river, and when the Territory of Alabama was formed by the Act of March 3d, 1817, these lands fell within the Territory of Alabama. The grant made to Jefferson College was made before the State of Mississippi was organized and was by its terms a donation to a private corporation.

The official history of the Public Domain classes the grant to Jefferson College under the list of "Donations and Special Grants" and gives the order of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States locating the lands, and dated October 5, 1812. It is important to note that the site of Jefferson College was near Natchez, in the present limits of the State of Mississippi, but the township granted to it was located on the Tombeckbee river, and this location was not changed up to the time when the Act of Congress of February 20, 1819, was passed, although at that time the lands were situated in what had become the separate Territory of Alabama, by the Act of March 3, 1817.

If, therefore, in the Act of February 20, 1819, Congress considered that the grant made to Jefferson College had been made to the people or the Legislature of the Mississippi Territory, it assumed that a grant made to a private corporation had been made to the people, and assumed also that a township, actually then located within the limits of the Territory of Alabama, belonged to the people of Mississippi.

Without dwelling upon the complications that would have arisen if Mississippi had claimed the ownership of a township of land within the limits of the State of Alabama, it is worthy of note that from its foundation, in 1802, to the year 1826, there is nothing in the Acts of the Territorial or State Legislatures in Mississippi indicating that Jefferson College was in any way under the control of the State. It is true that the Territorial Legislature in the Act of December 13, 1816, provided for a loan of money to the trustees of Jefferson College, but it also provided that "bond in double the amount should be taken," and that suit should be instituted if the funds should not be returned at the stipulated time. Moreover, in the same Act of December 13, 1816, the Legislature made donations of money to two other schools—Greene Academy and St. Stephen's Academy—which were, in no sense, State institutions, and not so regarded by the Legislature.

The Legislature and people of the newly formed State of Mississippi were eager to utilize the means for public education afforded in the grants of land made by Congress in the Act of February 20, 1819. It was, however, at once evident to the Legislature that it would have difficulty in securing the township which had been granted by Congress to Jefferson College, a private corporation. The Act of Congress of February 20, 1819, implied that the original grant to Jefferson College had been intended for the Territory and State of Mississippi. It was evident to the Legislature of the State that there was no valid ground on which it could base a claim to this township, however much it might desire to have this addition to the lands it had received from Congress for the support of common schools and a seminary of learning. The trustees of Jefferson College seemed willing to relinquish some of their rights as an independent corporation if thereby they might help the institution to prosperity, or gain assistance from the State.

The following extract from a "Historical Sketch of Jefferson College, published by order of the Board of Trustees in 1840," page 79, bears out this statement:

"To afford an opportunity to the Legislature of placing the institution [Jefferson College] more immediately under its control and management, and to give to it that patronage and support which would be due to it as a State Institution, the trustees proposed to the next session of the Legislature, in January, 1825, a modification of their charter. The act of the thirtieth of January, 1826, was accordingly passed and accepted by the trustees." _

It was clearly understood, by both the Legislature and the trustees of Jefferson College, at this time, 1826, that the College was not a "State institution."

In 1829, the Legislature of the State adopted a resolution authorizing the Executive—

"To appoint three agents to inquire into all the means and resources in the State applicable to the purpose of general education; to confer with the trustees of Jefferson College and ascertain the condition and prospects of the institution, and whether it was practicable, and on what terms the trustees would surrender the charter to the State.

"The conference accordingly took place on the twenty-seventh of October, 1829, and an address, setting forth their views at large, was presented by the agents, accompanied by several interrogatories propounded by them as to the dimensions and arrangements of the college building, the endowments and available funds, the number and character of the professors, its future prospects, the expediency of surrendering the charter, and, if the surrender was deemed expedient, what report the agents should make to the Legislature as to the money loaned to the institution." (Extract from "Historical Sketch of Jefferson College," page 83.)

From the same "Historical Sketch," published by the trustees of Jefferson College, the following statements are taken (see pp. 83, 84):

"The temper of the board assembled on this occasion was most favorable to the desires of the agents. The investigation, however, given the subject by the committee appointed to prepare a reply on behalf of the trustees, satisfied not only the trustees, but the agents themselves, of the utter inexpediency, if not impracticability, of the measure.

"* * * As to the proposed surrender of the charter, it was shown that the proposition involved not merely the annihilation of Jefferson College, but the forfeiture of its resources, and, consequently, could confer no benefit to any other institution, though established in its name; that it could not, by the clearest principle of law, transmit its revenues or endowments to an institution erected in its stead; for, as to all purposes to which they were designed, they would necessarily fail with the demise of the corporation in which they were originally vested. * * * The land on the Tombigby, if it did not revert to the original grantor, would escheat to the State of Alabama."

After this failure to secure the surrender of the charter of Jefferson College to the State, in 1829, on account of the difficulties indicated, all hope of the State's gaining control of the township of land granted by Congress to Jefferson College was lost, and the Legislature turned its attention to the proper administration of the trust connected with the second township mentioned in the Act of Congress of February 20, 1819, and received previously to 1825.

Various causes prevented the speedy use of this grant for the purpose intended. The ambiguity of the Act of donation in its reference to Jefferson College, a private institution, itself a beneficiary of Congress, the desire of this and other schools to be taken under the fostering care of the State and to become the recipients of the seminary fund, and the fact that the Indian title was not extinguished to a large part of the territory embraced in the State, are reasons which seem to have had weight in causing the putting off to a later date of the founding of a State University upon the grant of land received from the Federal Congress.

From 1829 to 1833 the State adopted the policy of leasing the seminary lands. As these were agricultural lands, generally covered with heavy timber, and as other lands were abundant in the market, the plan was not successful, and up to 1831 only $8,402 was received from rents. In 1831 the Legislature directed the lands to be sold. Thirty-five and one-half sections were sold, in the manner prescribed by the Legislature, for $277,332.52. The Act of the Legislature of February 20, 1840, appropriated all the proceeds of the sale of seminary lands "for the use and benefit of the University of the State of Mississippi."

The management of the funds received from the sale of the original grant from Congress was vested in the Legislature of the State. The Act of the Legislature of March 5, 1880, provides for the ascertainment of the indebtedness of the State on account of the seminary fund, and "that the sum of $32,643 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the year 1880, and annually thereafter, for the purpose of paying the interest due on said sum of $544,061.22."

The fact that Mississippi was entitled to at least one more township of land for the State University seems to have been entirely forgotten in the State until the attention of Chancellor Fulton was attracted to it in his study of the history of the University in 1892. He called the attention of the Board of Trustees to the matter in his annual report in June, 1892. No action was then taken in the matter. Attention was again called to it in 1893, and the board authorized the Chancellor to prepare a memorial to Congress reciting the facts and asking for the grant of additional lands to indemnify the State and the University. This memorial was prepared as directed, signed by the members of the Board of Trustees, and presented to Congress. It enlisted the hearty support of all the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Mississippi. The memorial asked, in order that the State and University might be fully indemnified for the failure of Congress to grant to Mississippi in 1819 her full quota of land for a State University, that Congress would grant to the State of Mississippi for the State University three additional townships, making the amount to this State for the State University as great as to any of the States for this purpose.

As a result of this memorial, Congress, by the Act of June 20, 1894, granted one additional township of land to the State for the State University.

This land was selected in 1895 out of lands that had been formerly reserved for naval uses. These lands were restored to the Public Domain by Act of March 3, 1895, whose passage was urged by Chancellor Fulton with the co-operation of the delegation from Mississippi in Congress. Upon the passage of this Act, land was at once selected by the Governor for the University. This additional township of 23,040 acres lies in the yellow pine district of the State in Harrison and Jackson Counties.

On March 23, 1900, the State Treasurer gave credit to the University for the sum of $134,688.24, being the proceeds of the sale by the Trustees of the University of Mississippi made on the 10th of March, 1900, of the timber on 16,833.53 acres of land, a part of the grant of 23,040 acres of land made by Congress in the Act of July 20, 1894. This fund is known as the 1894 Land Grant Fund. To it was added, October 10, 1905, the sum of $20,405 from the sale of timber on other parts of the township.

On the 20th of February, 1840, the Legislature passed an Act providing for the location of the University. Upon the report of commissioners appointed under this Act in the year 1841, before the organization of the University, the present location was fixed by the action of the Legislature by a majority of one vote. On the twenty-fourth of February, 1844, the University of Mississippi was duly chartered by the Legislature and its first Board of Trustees named.* In July, 1848, the election of the

*CHARTER OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MISSISSIPPI.

An Act to Incorporate the University of Mississippi, Feb. 24, 1844.

1. J. Alexander Ventress, John A. Quitman, William L. Sharkey, Alexander M. Clayton, William Y. Gholson, Jacob Thompson, Pryor Lea, Edward C. Wilkinson, James M. Howry, John J. McCaughan, Rev. Francis Hawkes, J. N. Waddel, A. H. Pegues are hereby appointed first Faculty occurred, and on the sixth of November, of that year, the first session opened.

The first Board of Trustees was composed of men who ranked among the most distinguished citizens of the State. Among these, Hon. James Alexander Ventress has the distinction of being the author of the bill, which became a law in 1844, organizing the University. He received his education in the common schools of Wilkinson County, Mississippi, at the University of Edinburgh, the Academie de Paris, and the University of Berlin. He was a brilliant scholar and writer. While in Berlin he was the German correspondent and assistant editor of the Revue de Deux Mondes. To the organization, equipment and maintenance of the University of Mississippi he devoted his talents and his large political influence as a member of the Legislature and Speaker of the House of Representatives. He was continuously a member of the Board of Trustees from 1844 to 1867, the time of his death. An even longer period, twenty-six years, was covered by the valuable services of another member of the first Board, Judge James M. Howry. From 1844 to 1870 this devoted friend of the University gave freely of his time and talents in untiring efforts to advance the interests of the institution. During the greater part of this time he discharged with eminent ability and conspicuous fidelity the duties of the combined offices of Secretary and Treasurer. It was Judge Howry who successfully led the forces favoring the introduction of the Evidences of Christianity into the curriculum and establishing the University on a basis distinctly Christian.

These are types of the men named in the list of Trustees of the University given in this volume. No citizens of the State as a body have shown a higher degree of intelligence, or a larger or more unselfish devotion to the highest public interests than the men who have from 1844 given their time and influence to the promotion of higher education through trustees of the University of Mississippi, in Lafayette County, and they and their successors in office are hereby declared and constituted a body, politic and corporate, by the name and style of the "University of Mississippi," a majority of whom shall form a quorum to do business, but a committee of less number may be appointed to transact necessary business in the interim of a regular session of said trustees.

2. Said corporation shall be possessed of all the general powers, privileges and emoluments now secured to similar corporations by the constitution and laws of this State, and to adopt such by-laws and rules as they may deem expedient for the accomplishment of the trust reposed in them, not repugnant to the constitution and laws of this State.

3. The said board of trustees shall have full power, and entire control, over the funds belonging to the "University of Mississippi," or the "Seminary Fund," after it shall have been collected, to be by them applied toward the consummation of the plan of the "University of Mississippi;" and said trustees shall have power to devise and adopt such a system of learning as in their judgment they may deem most advisable to be pursued in the course of education in the University; to employ a competent person to draft a plan of the same and appoint commissioners to contract for the erection of the University building so soon as they may think advisable.

4. Said board of trustees shall have power to fill all vacancies that may occur in their body.

5. This Act shall be repealed at the will of the Legislature, and shall be in force from and after its passage.

the University, without other compensation than that which comes from the satisfaction of a high duty well discharged.

The first meeting of the Trustees was held in the capital of the State, January 15, 1845, at which time an organization was effected. Under the original charter the Board was a self-perpetuating corporation consisting of thirteen members. In 1857, by an Act of the Legislature, the Governor became, ex officio, a member and President of the Board. Since the Civil War vacancies have been filled by the Governor's appointment. An Act of the Legislature of 1870 states that such appointments are to be made with the advice and consent of the Senate. In 1876 the number of trustees was increased to fifteen. There are now seventeen members of the Board appointed for a term of six years, one ex officio, the State Superintendent of Public Education, one from each of the eight Congressional Districts, and eight from the State at large, with the Governor as ex officio President. In this Board is vested the supreme control of the University.

The second regular meeting of the Board of Trustees was held in Oxford, July 14, 1845. The Board accepted two half-sections of land lying immediately west of the town of Oxford, the south half of section 20, and the north half of section 29, township 8, range 3 W., which had been purchased by citizens of Oxford and Lafayette County and donated to the State for the location of the University. Preliminaries were arranged for the construction of buildings and an executive committee appointed to attend to details. At that time a virgin forest covered the present Campus of the University. The Board seems to have been hampered by difficulties in the way of securing the funds supposed to be available in the State treasury for their undertaking, and but little progress was made in preparation for work. At the next meeting in January, 1846, William Nicholl, an Englishman, was elected as supervising architect. Plans were made for the Lyceum Building, the two contiguous dormitories, and residences for four professors, and work was begun upon these buildings probably in 1847. At the meeting of the Board held in Oxford July 12, 1848, the election of a faculty was considered. During this meeting of the Board occurred an earnest discussion relating to the religious character of the University. Two members of the Board vigorously opposed the introduction of the Evidences of Christianity into the curriculum, and the election of any Christian minister to a professorship. It was then definitely settled that the University should have stamped upon it such religious and moral character in its work as would be acceptable to the Christian people who compose a large majority of the people of the State of Mississippi.

George Frederick Holmes was elected President of the University. Albert Taylor Bledsoe was elected Professor of Mathematics, etc. John Millington was elected Professor of Natural Sciences; Rev. John N. Wadell was elected Professor of Languages. To the President of the University was assigned instruction in Mental and Moral Philosophy, Logic, Belles-Lettres, Political Economy, International Law. To the Professor of Mathematics was assigned instruction in that department and in the science of Astronomy. The Professor of Natural Science was required to give instruction in Chemistry, Botany, Geology, Mineralogy and Natural Philosophy. The Professor of Languages was required to give instruction in the Latin, Greek, Hebrew, French, Spanish and German languages. After laying these plans the Board adjourned to meet in October following for the opening exercises of the University. The record in the minutes of the Board of Trustees for Monday, November 6th, 1848, is as follows: "The Board met pursuant to adjournment; present, Messrs. Davis, Howry, Pegues, Thompson, Williams and Young. The President being absent, Mr. Young was called to the chair, and this being appointed as the day for opening the University, the Board repaired to the University buildings to attend to the installation of the Faculty, whereupon Mr. Thompson delivered an address on the part of the Trustees, and Mr. President Holmes on the part of the Faculty, and thereupon the institution was declared open for the reception of students, and on motion of Mr. Davis the Board adjourned until to-morrow morning at eight o'clock."

During this first session eighty students were enrolled. The records indicate that most of these young men were very poorly prepared for any sort of college work, and that their ideals of college life included much more of frolic than of labor. The records of the first Faculty meetings indicate a considerable exercise of disciplinary power. Nearly one month was lost before suitable text-books could be procured, and this opportunity was largely improved by those students who were inclined to idle habits. The late Chancellor Waddel, who was a participant in these beginnings, is authority for the statement that probably no more crude and disorderly set of young men ever assembled in any college. The educating power of the University is exemplified by the fact that very many of these young men have worthily filled places of highest eminence and influence. The President of the University was forced to return to Virginia on account of sickness in his family in the spring of 1849. His three colleagues, with Professor Bledsoe as acting President, completed the work of the session.

The records of the Board of Trustees show the following entry on Monday, July 9, 1849: "This being the day of the commencement of the first annual examinations of the students at the University, the Board took a recess at 9 o'clock A. M. and attended the examinations of the Freshman class on the Latin and Greek Languages, and at 3 P. M. the Board again took a recess and attended the examination of the Freshman class on Mathematics, which closed the exercises of the day."

Similar honor was paid by the Board to the Sophomore class the next day. On Thursday, July 12th, 1849, "the Board took a recess and repaired to the Presbyterian church, where an address was delivered by the Hon. A. M. Clayton, President of the Board of Trustees, and a commencement address by Prof. A. T. Bledsoe, President pro tem, of the Faculty, in the presence of the students and a large auditory."

It is noteworthy, and probably consistent with the experiences of this first session, that in this commencement address Prof. Bledsoe discusses total depravity as a factor to be considered in educational work. Other exercises at this first commencement consisted of "composition and declamation by students." There was no class more advanced than the Sophomore.

At the close of this first session Dr. Augustus B. Longstreet, of Georgia, was elected President of the University.

Under the wise administration of the Faculty and Trustees, the University began to grow rapidly in numbers, and in the confidence of the public. The statistical information set forth in this catalogue will show who were connected with the institution as officers and students, and will indicate something of the extent of the work of each session. In 1856 President Longstreet resigned, and Prof. F. A. P. Barnard was elected to succeed him. President Barnard was, fortunately, able to secure from the Legislature funds for new buildings which were needed, and for the larger and better equipment of the library and the scientific departments of the University. The wisdom of his work in this direction was proven by the fact that the University of Mississippi speedily took rank as one of the best equipped institutions in the country. The value of the prestige thus attained was tangible and has been permanent.

In the spring of 1861 the excitement due to political events seriously interrupted the work of the University. Many students withdrew before the close of the session, in order to enlist in the Confederate army. A company of students, which has become historic, was organized on the campus under the title "University Greys." The record of the service of this company of students is shown by the following memorandum, furnished by Hon. J. L. Power, Secretary of State:

UNIVERSITY GREYS.

Company A, Eleventh Mississippi, Davis Brigade.

Original commander, William B. Lowry.

Organized February 28, 1861.

Whole number on roll during the war	135
Died of disease	7
Killed or died of wounds	30
Discharged, resigned, retired	53
Transfers by promotion to other commands	10
Deserted or dropped	10
Missing	1
Losses from all causes	111
Accounted for, March, 1865	24

It is probable that four-fifths of all the young men whose names appear on the rolls as students of the University, from its organization up to the beginning of the civil war, enlisted in the Confederate service. This fact is indicated in this catalogue with regard to many students individually, and such indication is by no means intended to show that others did not see such service. A very large proportion, much larger than the average of Confederate soldiers, sacrificed their lives in the service of the State.

At the close of the session in the spring of the year 1861 there was some expectation that the exercises might be resumed in the fall. At the appointed time for opening the next session only four students appeared for matriculation. Realizing that the civil war would continue indefinitely, all the members of the Faculty resigned and the doors of the institution were closed. During the civil war the buildings of the University were occupied sometimes by Confederate and sometimes by Federal soldiery. Soon after the battle of Shiloh they were used for hospital purposes, and gave their shelter to some 1,500 sick and wounded Confederate soldiers. More than 700 of these sleep in unmarked graves in a cemetery near the University campus.

When the University buildings were occupied by Federal soldiery the personal influence of the late Professors Barnard, Boynton and others who were in the North, secured the interest of General Grant in the protection of the apparatus and buildings belonging to the institution. The close of the civil strife found the University buildings and other materials but little damaged by the vicissitudes of war. In the summer of 1865 efforts were made at the first meeting of the Legislature to reorganize the institution, and the first session after the war opened in the fall of 1865, under the presidency of Rev. John N. Waddel, D.D. Through all the vicissitudes of the reconstruction period the University experienced the same good fortune which had attended it during the civil war. It has constantly grown in influence and prestige.

The statistical tables in this catalogue and other data herein given will sufficiently indicate the work and progress of the institution under the administration of Chancellors John N. Waddel, Alexander P. Stewart, Edward Mayes, Robert B. Fulton, and up to the present time. The necessarily meagre facts stated in these pages in regard to those who have been students in the institution show by the outcome of its work that the institution has been singularly fortunate in the cultivation of strong character. This is undoubtedly due to the fact that its policy has always been to secure diligent work on the part of its students together with manly deportment.

The personnel of the student body in the ante-bellum days was entirely different from that of later years. When it is remembered that the per capita distribution of wealth in Mississippi was larger in the years preceding the Civil War than in any other State, it will be understood that the student body was composed very largely of the sons of wealthy parents, many of whom did not realize the importance of work and study. But the record of the lives of these men show that the student body of this period has furnished to the State many of the noblest patriots and citizens.

Immediately after the Civil War the halls of the University were filled with a class of students never before seen in any American college. They were the sons of parents who had been wealthy but whose wealth had been entirely swept away by the Civil War. Perhaps half of these young men had served in the Confederate Army. With such preparation for college as these circumstances suggest they came with possibly as little of scholastic attainments as those students who entered in 1848; but they came with a determination born of necessity. The efforts put forth and the influence felt while here resulted in the development of a type of manly character and power which cannot be equalled by the records of any other American college. A study of the lifework of this group of students fully verifies this strong statement as fact.

In later years the University has been able to achieve higher advancement in scholarship. Its preparatory work has been abolished. It has over one hundred high schools affiliated with it and engaged in the preparation of students for its courses. Its student body in late years has been characterized by a somewhat broader range of scholarship. Every effort is made to keep its students in their studies and in all that enlists their attention fully abreast with the activities, intellectual and other, which characterize college life at the beginning of the twentieth century.

While in the original plan of the University the establishment of a course in Governmental Science and Law was provided for, six years elapsed before, in 1854, a Law Class was organized.

Beginning with the session of 1882-3, women have been admitted to the University upon the same terms and conditions as men.

In 1892 preparatory courses in the University were discontinued. Since that time the grade of educational work done has been advanced fully one year, the number of bona fide college students has increased from 167 to nearly 500 (October, 1909).

In 1900 the Fanny J. Ricks Summer Term of the University began a much needed work for those who cannot attend the regular session. This work was maintained in the summer of 1900, 1901, 1902 and 1903 through the liberality of Mrs. Ricks. Her generosity secured additional funds for 1903 which greatly enlarged the work in scope and usefulness.

Courses in Engineering were organized in 1900. (Some such work had been offered in 1872, but discontinued in 1875.) In 1903 Departments of Education and Medicine were added. As yet only the first half of a regular four-year course in Medicine has been given. Beginning with the session of 1909-10 the work of the last two years will be offered at Vicksburg in connection with the State Charity Hospital of that place. This property, valued at $150,000.00, was acquired by the University in 1908. A Department of Pharmacy has been in successful operation throughout the current session.

In 1902 the Legislature appropriated the sum of $93,700 for various improvements, $24,000 of this being for current expenses. This fund enabled the University to enlarge greatly its facilities and advantages for the young men and young women of Mississippi. With it were constructed substantial additions to the public buildings and a commodious dormitory for women students.

With the liberal appropriations made by the Legislatures of 1904 and 1906, the institution has added much to its equipment and thus increased its usefulness.

The Legislature of 1908 made the University the largest appropriation in the latter's history. As results, a large and thoroughly equipped dormitory for men, a commodious dining hall, and a new power house have been built; the light and heat distributing systems have been renewed and enlarged; and about one-half mile of wide concrete walks have been laid where most needed on the campus.

The following named have served as the chief executive officers of the University under the titles and for the periods indicated:

President —George Frederick Holmes, LL.D.....	1848-1849
President —Augustus B. Longstreet, LL.D., D.D.....	1849-1856
President —Frederick A. P. Barnard, LL.D., D.D.....	1856-1859
Chancellor —Frederick A. P. Barnard, LL.D., D.D.....	1859-1861
Chancellor —John Newton Waddel, LL.D., D.D.....	1865-1874
Chancellor —Gen. Alexander P. Stewart.....	1874-1886
Chairman of Faculty —Edw. Mayes, LL.D., F.S.C.....	1886-1889
Chancellor —Edward Mayes, LL.D., F.S.C.....	1889-1891
Vice-Chancellor —Robert Burwell Fulton, A.M.....	1892-1892
Chancellor —Robert Burwell Fulton, A.M., LL.D.....	1892-1906
Vice-Chancellor —Alfred Hume, C.E., D.Sc.....	1906-1907
Chancellor —Andrew Armstrong Kincannon, M.S., LL.D.....	1907-

NOTE.—Chancellor Mayes resigned January 1, 1892, and Vice-Chancellor Fulton acted as Chancellor until the end of the session, when he was elected to the Chancellorship.

From the opening of the University, in 1848, to the year 1870, the so-called "close curriculum" was in use. There was a course of study, entirely prescribed, leading to the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and a prescribed course leading to the degree of Bachelor of Laws. To say that a student was a "regular" student and in the Freshman, Sophomore, Junior or Senior class, was to define precisely his work. An "irregular" student was one not in the line of progress towards a degree, but taking a selected course of study. There was no department of preparatory education in the University previous to 1861. When the University again opened its doors in the fall of 1865, the lack of educational facilities in the State made it advisable to establish a department of preparatory education in the University, and this was continued until the end of the session of 1893.

The "close curriculum" system of education was changed by action of the Board of Trustees, taken October 26, 1870. By this action each student was allowed to choose one of these courses leading to a degree:

1. A defined course of four years' extent, leading to the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and similar in its requirements to the course previously offered.

2. A defined course of three years' extent, leading to the degree of Bachelor of Science.

3. A defined course of three years' extent, leading to the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy.

4. A defined course of four years' extent, leading to the degree of Civil Engineer.

There were also offered—

5. Several definite Post-graduate courses, requiring one or more years for completion, open to Bachelors of Arts, and leading to the degree of Master of Arts.

6. Several definite Post-graduate courses, requiring at least two years for completion, open to Bachelors of Arts, and leading to the degree of Doctor of Philosophy.

Since 1870 various changes have been made in the courses and degrees offered, suggested by the experience of this and other institutions doing similar work. All of these changes have tended to give greater thoroughness and larger extent to the work done by any student in earning a degree. In 1873 the course for Bachelor of Science was made a four years' course, and, in 1875, the course for Bachelor of Philosophy became in fact a four years' course, and its topics of study largely elective. Election of studies was gradually allowed to a considerable extent in the courses for B.A. and B.S. until 1889. In 1889 Latin, Greek, English and Mathematics were made the characteristic studies of the B.A. course; Mathematics and the Natural Sciences of the B. S. course, and the Bachelor of Philosophy course was made entirely elective.

At present the University offers courses leading to the degrees Bachelor of Science, Bachelor of Arts, Master of Arts, Bachelor of Laws, Bachelor of Engineering, Bachelor of Science (in Education), Bachelor of Arts (in Education), Doctor of Medicine, Graduate in Pharmacy, Bachelor of Pharmacy.

The course for a bachelor's degree in the Academic Department requires the successful completion of sixty-five (65) units of work, a unit of work being defined to be the amount involved in attendance upon lectures or recitations for one hour a week for one session, or upon laboratory work for two hours a week for one session. The student's graduating thesis is counted as equivalent to one unit, and by systematic attendance upon physical culture in the gymnasium, not less than three hours a week during a session, he may reduce the number of points required for graduation by one for each of three sessions, making it possible to graduate thus with sixty-one (61) units of class-room work instead of sixty-five (65). The courses of study leading to a bachelor's degree are so arranged that sixteen (16) units will normally constitute full work for a student. With this amount he would graduate in four years.

No student will be permitted to take less than thirteen (13) units of work, except in very special cases. No student having less than forty-five (45) points to his credit will be permitted to take more than eighteen (18) units of work.

In the Department of Science, Literature and the Arts, the work of the course leading to a bachelor's degree consists of (1) Prescribed Studies, (2) Group Electives and (3) Free Electives. The Prescribed Studies as below indicated amount to twenty-eight (28) units of work. The Group Electives amount to from eighteen (18) to twenty-two (22) units, and the remainder of the course will allow about fifteen (15) units to be made by Free Electives.

(1) Prescribed Studies. Each candidate for a bachelor's degree must have placed to his credit on entrance, or complete in the University classes such college work in the following subjects as will entitle him to credit for the units indicated, which will be counted towards making the total number of units required for graduation; provided, such work has not been counted for points of admission.

English and Rhetoric.....	5 units.
Two Foreign Languages (at least three units in each of two)	6 units.
History.....	2 units.
Logic, Ethics or Psychology.....	2 units.
Mathematics.....	5 units.
Physics.....	2 units.
Chemistry.....	2 units.
Physiology, Botany, Zoology	2 units.
Political Economy or Sociology.....	2 units.

(2) Group Electives. Each candidate for a bachelor's degree is required to take either two or three of the twenty (20) courses indicated below and to take in them such an amount of work as will entitle him to receive credit for a total of from eighteen (18) to twenty-two (22) units, besides counting the credits he may have received in the same topics as Prescribed Studies. If he elects two, he is required to do from nine to eleven units in each. If he elects three, he is required to do from six to eight units in each.

1. Astronomy and Physics.
2. Biology.
3. Chemistry.
4. Drawing.
5. Electricity.
6. English.
7. French.
8. Geology and Paleontology.
9. German.
10. Greek.
11. History.
12. Latin.
13. Logic, Political Economy and Sociology.
14. Mathematics and Analytical Mechanics.
15. Mineralogy and Petrology.
16. Pathology, Bacteriology and Medical Zoology.
17. Physiology and Histology.
18. Psychology and Pedagogy.
19. Spanish and Italian.
20. Surveying.

(3) Free Electives. The Prescribed Studies and the Group Electives taken together amount to from forty-six (46) to fifty (50) units. Students will select the remainder of their work in Free Electives. If a student completes all the work prescribed as a course for one class in one school in one session, he may count such at its face value in units and as a Free Elective. The courses that may be counted as Free Electives are marked with the letters a, b, c, d, and designating numbers in the Detailed Statements made later regarding the different schools in the University.

Not more than ten (10) units of work in any one professional department may be counted as a Free Elective for either the B.S. or the B.A. degree.

No Academic student may elect professional studies until he is entitled to classification as a Junior in the Academic Department.

For the past two sessions twelve (12) Carnegie units have been required for full admission to the Academic Department of the University. Beginning with 1910-11 the requirement will be fourteen (14) such units.

ACADEMIC DEPARTMENT.

PHILOSOPHY, LOGIC, SOCIOLOGY AND POLITICAL ECONOMY.

In the history of the University the subjects included in this department have been variously assigned. During the earlier period instruction was given in them largely by the Presidents and Chancellors, who, from the number and variety of the subjects committed to their charge, must have been men of marvelously versatile endowment. The catalogue of 1853-54 contains the following:

"Augustus B. Longstreet, LL.D., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Rhetoric, Logic, Political Economy, International Law and Evidences of Christianity." In later years separate and distinct Professorships were provided for these subjects and, with minor changes from time to time, they have been given prominence in the course of instruction.

About the year 1855 there was organized the chair of Metaphysics and Ethics, the first incumbent of which was Rev. N. M. Crawford, D.D., of Georgia, who filled the chair for only one year, having been called to the Presidency of Georgetown College, Kentucky. This chair was subsequently filled by Rev. Geo. W. Carter, D.D. (1857-60) and by Hon. L. Q. C. Lamar, LL.D. (1860-61), the latter of whom was again called to the chair of Ethics in 1866.

In connection with the School of Metaphysics and Ethics there occurred in the very infancy of the institution an incident which doubtless, in no unimportant degree, influenced and determined the character of work to be done by the University throughout the whole of its existence. In one of the first meetings of the Board of Trustees a proposition was offered to exclude forever from the course of study the subject of Evidences of Christianity. This proposition provoked a prolonged and heated discussion, a result of which was the resignation of one member of the Board, who in his letter of resignation took occasion to make a bitter assault upon the Christian religion. Happily, however, an overwhelming majority of the Board were favorable to the admission of the subject into the curriculum, and the result of the controversy was to stamp the University as a Christian, though in no sense as a sectarian institution.

In 1868 there was established the chair of Metaphysics, Logic and Political Science, which was filled successively by Gen. Francis A. Shoup, Rev. James A. Lyon, D.D, and Rev. J. J. Wheat, D.D, until 1886. In 1889 the title and scope of the department was again changed so as to include the subject of Mental and Moral Philosophy, Logic, History and Political Economy. Under this organization the department has continued until the present time, with the exception that in 1897 the subject of History was severed and made a separate school.

MATHEMATICS.

The influence of the United States Military Academy is evident throughout the first forty years of the history of the School of Mathematics in the University of Mississippi. The comparatively small sections into which classes were divided, the text-books used, the character of the curriculum, the large amount of individual work on the part of students at the black-board, the rigid discipline and thorough training, all bear abundant testimony to the truth of this assertion. The record of these earlier years is altogether honorable.

The mathematical requirements for admission to the Freshman class embraced nothing beyond arithmetic until the end of the first decade from the opening of the University in 1848. Then rudimentary Algebra was added. After the Civil War the amount of Algebra was materially increased, sometimes including Quadratic Equations but more often omitting that subject. The standard for entrance was raised again in 1891 by the addition of three books of Plane Geometry. Since 1906 Algebra through the Progressions, and all of Plane Geometry have been required for admission. Consequently the course of study now is at least one year in advance of that before the war. Trigonometry was then in the last term of the Sophomore year, its place at present being in the Freshman; Analytics was in the Junior, now in the Sophomore; Calculus in the Senior, now in the Sophomore and Junior. For many years Descriptive Geometry was a part of the course in pure Mathematics. This subject is now offered in the Engineering Department.

As already suggested, most of the text-books in use until twenty years ago bore the stamp of West Point. The works of Davies, Church, Mahan, and Bartlett, particularly the first, were favorites. Davies' Bourdon and Davies' Legendre, in older and later editions, were continued from session to session. In more recent years the text-books given in the following list have been used. The authors' names appear in the order in which their books were introduced. The parentheses denote the one in use at present:

Algebra—Venable, Wentworth, Downey, Hawkes, (Wentworth).

Geometry—Venable, Wentworth, Bowser, Wells (Wentworth).

Trigonometry—Wentworth, Bowser, Crockett, Phillips and Strong (Wentworth).

Analytical Geometry—Puckle, Bowser, Hardy, Nichols, Ashton, (Nichols)

Calculus—Todhunter, Courtenay, Bowser, Hardy, Nicholson, Taylor, Nichols, Granville (Osborne).

In addition to the regular undergraduate work, courses have been given to small groups of graduate students in Weld's Determinants, Osborne's Examples of Differential Equations, Johnson's Differential Equations, Pierce's Newtonian Potential Function, Merriman's Least Squares, Williamson's Advanced Calculus, C. Smith's Solid Analytical Geometry, Williamson's Dynamics, Bowser's Analytical Mechanics, Routh's Rigid Dynamics.

The rank and term of service of each member of the corps of instruction is given below:

This account of the School of Mathematics would be very unsatisfactory and incomplete without brief biographical sketches of the men who made its history. To record these is a pleasant duty.

ALBERT TAYLOR BLEDSOE, M.A., LL.D.

Born in Kentucky in 1808; appointed to a cadetship in the United States Military Academy in 1825 and graduated therefrom in 1830; saw military service two years; in 1833 became Professor of Mathematics in Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio; after serving there two years, filled the chair of Mathematics in Miami University, and from 1840 to 1848 practiced law in Springfield, Illinois; elected Professor of Mathematics and Astronomy in the University of Mississippi in 1848, there being about fifty candidates for this position; resigned in 1854 and became Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia, continuing as such until 1861; Assistant Secretary of War of the Confederate States; after the war resided in Baltimore as editor of the Southern Review, dying in 1877.

While Bledsoe was a profound mathematician, he was even more a theologian and philosopher. His writings fully justify this statement. As early as 1845 he published a work entitled "An Examination of President Edwards on the Will." About ten years later his "Theodicy, or Vindication of the Divine Glory" was published. His "Philosophy of Mathematics" is of special interest to the student of the calculus.

It was during Professor Bledsoe's incumbency of the chair of Mathematics that L. Q. C. Lamar was Adjunct Professor of Mathematics. Seldom have two such massive and brilliant intellects been so closely associated in the same work.

FREDERICK A. P. BARNARD, M.A., LL.D., D.D.

(See Sketches of the Presidents and Chancellors of the University in this volume.)

JORDAN M'CULLOUGH PHIPPS, M.A.

Born in Tennessee October 14, 1828; removed to North Mississippi before the Chickasaw cession was organized into counties; was graduated from the University of Mississippi in 1851; while studying law in New Orleans was appointed, early in 1852, Adjunct Professor of Mathematics in the University of Mississippi to fill a vacancy caused by the resignation of Hon. L. Q. C. Lamar; was elected to the full professorship of Mathematics in 1858 and served in that position until the outbreak of the Civil War; after the war was an attorney-at-law and Mayor of Oxford, Mississippi; has practiced law ever since except for three years spent as Chief Inspector of Customs of the Port of Key West; present address, Key West, Florida.

CLAUDIUS WISTAR SEARS, M.A.

Born in Peru, Massachusetts, November 8, 1817; appointed cadet in United States Military Academy, West Point, June 30, 1837; graduated from West Point June 30, 1841; promoted Second Lieutenant 8th U. S.

Infantry; served with his regiment in the Florida War; resigned his commission in the U. S. Army October 10, 1842; was instructor of Mathematics in St. Thomas Hall, Holly Springs, Mississippi, 1844 and 1845; was Professor of Mathematics in the University of Louisiana, New Orleans, from 1845 to 1859.

While a resident of New Orleans, La., he was married to Susan Alice Gray, Houston, Texas, August 6, 1853.

In 1859 he returned to Holly Springs, Mississippi, and was President of St. Thomas Hall until 1861, when he enlisted in the Army of the Confederate States and was appointed Captain of Company G, 17th Mississippi Regiment, June 6, 1861; was appointed Colonel of the 46th Mississippi Regiment December 11, 1862; was appointed Brigadier-General March 7, 1864; at the battle of Nashville, December 15, 1864, was severely wounded, having a leg shot off.

Elected Professor of Mathematics in the University of Mississippi in 1865, in which position he served until June, 1889; died at his residence at Oxford, Mississippi, February 15, 1891.

HENRY AUBREY STRODE, M.A.

Born in Fredericksburg, Virginia, February 14, 1844; soldier Braxton's Battery, Fredericksburg Artillery, Confederate States Army, 1861-1865.

After the war attended the University of Virginia where he was awarded the Courtenay Medal in mathematics; became Assistant Professor of Mathematics at Richmond College, Richmond, Virginia.

In 1872 established the Kenmore High School at Amherst, Virginia, of which he continued as Principal until the year 1889, when he accepted the Professorship of Mathematics in the University of Mississippi, which he filled during the session 1889-90; during a part of this session was also the acting Professor of Chemistry.

In 1890 he became the first President of Clemson Agricultural College, the Agricultural and Mechanical College of South Carolina, and held this position until 1893; was also Professor of Mathematics in Clemson College until 1896, when he resigned, because of failing health, and returned to Virginia, where he died on September 1, 1898.

PHYSICS AND ASTRONOMY.

The School of Physics, originally called Natural Philosophy, was one of the first provided for at the University of Mississippi. For several years it was combined with Chemistry. Dr. John Millington, one of the four original members of the Faculty, was elected head of this department in July, 1848, and reported for duty the 6th of November following, this being the day designated for the formal opening.

Dr. Millington was born, reared and educated in England. He worked several years in the Royal Institution of London under Michael Faraday and Sir Humphrey Davy, and brought over with him a considerable supply of physical and chemical apparatus, much of which, especially such as was used for original research in Electricity, was of the same kind, and possibly the identical patterns used by Faraday and Davy. Many pieces of this interesting apparatus, which was purchased from Dr. Millington by the University, may yet be seen in the Physical Laboratory, marked I. M. for John Millington, the I. before vowels in old print, being supplanted by J. in modern print. He was recognized as an elegant and scholarly English gentleman, well versed in science both practical and theoretical. He was author of a treatise on Mechanics, and also of one on Civil Engineering. During his five years of service he never failed to secure and retain the respect and even the affection of his classes, as well as the unswerving confidence and loyal admiration of his associates and neighbors. He resigned in 1853 and was succeeded by Rev. J. C. Keeny, who, on request of his class, resigned at the end of his first session. In 1854 Dr. Frederick Augustus Porter Barnard took charge of Natural Philosophy in connection with his Mathematics. On entering upon his work he at once proved, by his brilliant lectures and active participation in original research, that a master mind was in charge of the science work. Realizing that appropriations of money were necessary for building up his own, as well as the other departments of the University, he turned a large part of his attention to investigating an old claim that the University held against the State for lands donated by the Federal Government for establishing a seminary fund. He analyzed the claim, made a careful calculation of the alleged indebtedness, together with accrued interest, and accurately presented the whole matter in a public address before the Mississippi Legislature. The result was ultimately liberal appropriations to the University, sufficient to add several new buildings and to make a large increase in apparatus and general equipments. In 1856 he was elected President of the University to succeed Augustus B. Longstreet, resigned. Three years after his election the title was changed from President to that of Chancellor. Dr. Barnard possessed many eminent qualities as chief executive, but as his service as Chancellor are described in another part of this book I shall not further pursue the subject here, but refer the reader for details to that article.

The University closed its doors for four years during the war, from June, 1861, to October, 1865. Doubtless the buildings had been spared by the Federal troops through the personal influence of Dr. Barnard with General Grant.

October the 25th, 1865, General Francis Asbury Shoup was elected Professor of Physics, Astronomy and Civil Engineering. This heavy work he did with credit till January, 1867, when he was relieved of Physics and Astronomy, but continued the other work till 1868, when he was offered the new chair of Metaphysics, Aesthetics, Logic and Political Philosophy. This he accepted, but the following year he resigned and left, much to the regret of the authorities of the University. I am indebted to his wife for the facts in the following brief sketch:

Francis Asbury Shoup was born in Connersville, Indiana, the 22d of March, 1835; graduated at West Point in 1856; commissioned immediately as Lieutenant and sent in command of artillery to Sullivan's Island, South Carolina. In 1859 he resigned and returned to his home in Indianapolis, intending to practice law. Owing to excitement caused by the John Brown Raid, he was enthusiastically elected and served as Captain of Zouaves from Indianapolis. His love and admiration, however, for the South impelled him, in 1860, to resign his Federal commission and tender his services, early the next year, to the newly formed Confederate Government at Montgomery, Alabama. He was commissioned Major in the Corps of Engineers and assigned to duty first in Mobile, later in the Trans-Mississippi Department, and finally in Vicksburg. After the siege and fall of Vicksburg, he was commissioned Brigadier-General, and served with General Joseph E. Johnston in the famous Dalton Campaign. His fortifications around Atlanta and his redoubts on the Chattahoochee were pronounced a remarkable feat in engineering.

As stated above he was elected Professor in the University of Mississippi at its reorganization after the war. In 1868 he took orders in the Episcopal Church and was ordained Priest by Bishop Green. He served St. Peter's Church in Oxford as Rector, in addition to his regular duties as Professor in the University. In 1869 he was elected Professor of Mathematics in the University of the South at Sewanee, Tennessee. This he accepted after giving four years of most efficient service to the University of Mississippi. In his new chair he continued to grow in usefulness and reputation, becoming the author of a valuable treatise on Algebra and a very popular work on Psychology. He died in 1896, loved and admired by all who knew him. As a mark of respect, the Daughters of the Confederacy have erected a granite shaft over his grave.

Dr. Landon Cabell Garland was elected January the 21st, 1867, to the chair of Theoretical Physics and of Astronomy. He had been for some years previous to the war and during its continuance, President of the University of Alabama. Being, however, a close student of science, he was pleased to have simply a professorship in his favorite field of research and to be free from the perplexing administrative duties of President. Having the duties of two chairs upon him, however, he was not given time or opportunity for extensive research. He was noted as a lucid and very attractive lecturer before his classes, as well as a most scholarly and cultured Southern gentleman. His influence in the university community was measured not alone by his scholarship, which was recognized by all as being of the highest type, but also by the magnetic personality of the man as a citizen, a neighbor and a friend. His example of upright living, dignity of bearing, cordiality in friendship, urbanity toward strangers, his fairness, truthfulness, and honesty in every kind of dealing, his devotion to his own church and liberality toward all other churches, his hospitality in his home as the head of a most cultured, elegant and pious family, his scrupulous concern for his own professional and private affairs, and his absolute non-participation in those of others, his splendid equipoise of temperament—never sportive—never gloomy—all these and many other virtues made his presence a comfort to his friends and a benefaction to the community. During the session of 1874-75 he was elected Chancellor of the new Vanderbilt University. Certain of our Faculty agreed to an exchange of hours so as to enable him to finish his course by the first of April, as he was under promise to start about that time to Europe to purchase physical and chemical apparatus for the Vanderbilt University to be in readiness for the opening in the following autumn. Before his departure the Methodist congregation asked him to deliver a farewell address to the young men of the town and of the University in the M. E. Church. He consented, and chose as his subject Psalms 119:9, "Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? By taking heed thereto according to thy word." Few farewell addresses, I presume, have ever been delivered that left more lasting impressions or more tender memories. Thus Dr. Garland left Mississippi as admirable in character as he was brilliant in intellect.

The following is a more accurate sketch from the pen of his daughter, Mrs. Rose G. Lewis, of Tuscaloosa, Alabama:

"Landon Cabell Garland was born at his father's home, known as 'The Grove,' in Nelson County, Virginia, on the 21st of March, 1810. He came from a long line of distinguished ancestry on both his father's and his mother's side. He was the son of Spotswood Garland, a lawyer and Clerk of the Court of Nelson County for more than forty years—a grandson of Capt. James Garland, an officer in the Revolutionary army. An earlier ancestor was 'Warden of the Cinque Ports,' one of the highest and most important offices in the gift of the English King. His mother was Lucinda Rose, daughter of Hugh Rose, of Geddes, a son of the celebrated Dr. Robert Rose, who came from Scotland to America in 1725.

"He was sent to the best preparatory schools which the country afforded, and entered the Sophomore class at Hampden-Sidney College, Virginia, in October, 1826. In all departments of learning he took the highest rank and graduated with first honor in a large and talented class. His father's intention was to send him to a law school, but he had exhibited such a taste for mathematical and scientific pursuits, and had made such large attainments in Chemistry beyond the ordinary course of college instruction as to warrant his friend, Dr. John H. Price, President of the Union Theological Seminary, who had been cognizant of his rare scientific ability, to recommend his appointment to the tutorship of Chemistry in Washington College, located at Lexington, Virginia. This was done without Mr. Garland's knowledge, and a week or two before he graduated. Being but nineteen years of age, he felt it his duty to submit the matter to the decision of his father. His father consented to the acceptance of the appointment, provided that after two or three years he should turn his attention to the law. Accordingly he went to Lexington in November, 1829. The manner in which he discharged the duties of his office gave such satisfaction to the Board of Trustees that at the expiration of the scholastic year he was unanimously elected Professor of Chemistry and Natural Philosophy. This appointment changed his destiny in life. Becoming more and more wedded to the sciences, with each returning year, he finally abandoned all idea of making law his profession, and devoted himself to the business of collegiate instruction.

"While Mr. Garland expended his labor chiefly upon the mathematics, pure and mixed, and the sciences of Chemistry, Geology and Botany, he was assiduous in the cultivation of languages, and used the Latin and Greek and several modern languages in the prosecution of his professional studies. He valued the Greek language chiefly for the original study of the New Testament, and in time attained to very considerable distinction as a biblical critic. This is attested by his contributions to the current religious literature of the day. (See sketch by Dr. Charles Foster Smith and others.)

“Mr. Garland was brought up in sympathy with the Methodist Church, of which both his parents were members. When Randolph-Macon College was put in operation during the winter of 1833-34, Mr. Garland was unanimously elected to the chair of Natural Philosophy and Chemistry. His inclinations all led him to remain at Lexington. His situation was entirely agreeable, and he had won the esteem and confidence of that community. But, impelled by a sense of duty to the Church of his father and mother, he accepted the situation to which the Church had called him, with a much smaller salary than he had been receiving. There was no class at the organization of the institution in the department of Natural Philosophy and Chemistry, but as the Professor-elect of Ancient Languages could not attend during the first session of the scholastic year, Mr. Garland discharged all the duties of this chair with an ability that showed that he was as much at home in philology as he was in science. On December the 29th, 1835, he was married to Louisa Francis Garland (a third cousin), daughter of David S. Garland and his wife, Jane Henry Meredith, a niece of Patrick Henry, the statesman and orator. The health of Dr. Olin, the President of Randolph-Macon, was so feeble as to induce his physicians to recommend a European tour. He obtained from the Board of Trustees an indefinite leave of absence, recommending to them to invest Mr. Garland, though the youngest of the Faculty, with the responsibility of the Vice-Presidency of the institution.

“After Dr. Olin’s return to America, considering a Southern climate unfavorable to his health, he resigned the presidency of Randolph-Macon, whereupon the board unanimously elected Mr. Garland to the office. His duties were very onerous and taxing, and while he faithfully discharged them, he undertook the preparation of a series of mathematical text-books, doing most of the work at night. All this combined to somewhat undermine a naturally good constitution, and in the fall of 1846 he resigned his position with the intention of practicing law. To prepare for this profession he returned to his father’s house, who was then living in Lovingsston, Nelson County, Virginia, and turned the whole energy of his disciplined mind to the study of law. He possessed a fine voice and oratorical power, and, no doubt, would have soon risen to the height of this profession. But the institutions of the country could not spare from the difficult and delicate work of collegiate training one who had proved himself so eminently fitted for it. The venerable college of William and Mary made an effort to secure his services as President, and other institutions did the same thing. However, before he had entered upon the practice of law he was invited to the chair of English Literature, Rhetoric and History in the University of Alabama. Thither he removed in the winter of 1847-48. A year or two after his connection with the University, the chair of Mathematics (pure and mixed) became vacant, to which, at his own request, he was transferred. In this chair his services were eminently useful, until about the year 1854 the President of the University, Dr. Basil Manly, retired on account of ill health, whereupon Dr. Garland was elected to fill his place. This threw upon him the duty of lecturing on Mental and Moral and Political Philosophy. Upon these studies Dr. Garland entered with great energy and untiring zeal, and regretted that he had not at an earlier period given these subjects the large attention he was then enabled to give. He considered them the most useful in the culture of the mind. Dr. Garland continued his connection with the University of Alabama, as its President, up to the time of its destruction by the raiding party of General Croxton, April, 1865. The Faculty scattered in various directions, but his services were retained for about a year, to raise a fund with which to rebuild the university. He was then called to the chair of Physics and Astronomy in the University of Mississippi. Here he remained till he could see the ardent desire of all his mature years about to be fulfilled, the founding of a great Southern University in deed, as well as in name, where the young men of the South could obtain, at small cost, the best facilities in all branches of learning and useful arts, especially in a preparation for the ministry. He believed in an educated ministry. As soon as he was made Chancellor of this new university in 1875, he went to Europe, where he spent nearly two years in studying and having made the most approved apparatus for the various scientific departments, Physics, Astronomy, Chemistry, etc.

"This short and imperfect sketch will close with an extract from a memorial address by Capt. Richard Irby, of Randolph-Macon College:

" 'When the Vanderbilt University was founded the President of its Board of Trust, the late Bishop McTyeire, one of his pupils at Randolph-Macon, at once sought Dr. Garland to take charge of the University, knowing full well his eminent qualifications for the task. Here Dr. Garland had a field worthy of his ability and experience. He and Bishop McTyeire had for years wrought together as father and son, zealously and effectively in the establishment of a great Christian University. In the order of Providence the Bishop was the first to be taken away by death, but in this field of his last and best endeavor, Dr. Garland was permitted to live and spend the evening of his useful life under the shadow of the stately halls he had seen rise from the earth and in the shade of the beautiful trees which had been planted and nursed by his former pupil. And here, at the ripe age of four score and four years, with a heart full of love to God and still yearning to do what he could for the young men of his country, "he ceased at once to work and to live." ' (February 13, 1895.)

"His remains lie entombed in a beautiful spot on the campus of Vanderbilt University under the loving care of those who will always honor and revere his name."

Dr. Garland was succeeded, in the University of Mississippi, in 1875, by his son-in-law, Robert Burwell Fulton, who had been Adjunct Professor in the department for several years. Professor Fulton had graduated with first honor in the class of 1869, and therefore brought to the department not only great intellectuality, but also great ambition and skillful devotion to science. He took hold with zeal both to improve the department and to advance science. Want of funds, at the same time, was a hindrance difficult to overcome. The policy of the trustees was rather toward establishing new departments than developing to high efficiency the old ones. Utilizing as best he could the small funds available and the campus laborers, he added to the equipments, enlarged the rooms and developed special arrangements for introducing laboratory work along with theoretical work. The design and execution of these good intentions were, in their very incipency, seriously embarrassed by the poor preparation of students entering the University. The work had to be very elementary to make any progress at all. In the department of Astronomy he succeeded in securing an appropriation for a new telescope, which, however, was not received till 1893, after he had been elected Chancellor, which occurred in January, 1892. As his duties increased in the Chancellor's office, while retaining the title of Professor of Physics and Astronomy, he abandoned all teaching except that of Astronomy. In the broader field of power, incident to his high office, his greatest services to the University of Mississippi were accomplished. But as a more detailed sketch of his life and work is given along with the other Chancellors, in other parts of this work, further details will be omitted here.

In 1899, after serving several years as Associate Professor of Physics, Dr. John Wesley Johnson was elected Professor of Physics, Chancellor Fulton still retaining the Astronomy. In 1907 Astronomy was again combined with Physics, and is so retained at present. In 1900 Electricity was separated from Physics, and Professor Douglas Anderson, from Tulane University, Louisiana, was elected Professor of Electricity and Electrical Engineering. He served only one year and was succeeded by Professor Arthur W. Smith, also from Tulane. He likewise served only one year, when Electricity was again combined with Physics, and Assistant Professor Eugene Campbell was transferred from the School of Chemistry to Physics and placed in charge of Electricity. The following year, 1903, the head of the department recommended that Electricity be separated from Physics and assigned to Professor Eugene Campbell. These recommendations were approved, and the general oversight of the electrical plant and waterworks was also assigned to Professor Campbell. In 1906 it was recommended that Hydraulics be separated from Physics and made a part of Civil Engineering. Physics being thus relieved of both Electricity and Hydraulics began at once to afford better opportunity for specializing in its own distinctive work.

A further notice is due Professor Eugene Campbell, who was born October 28, 1870, in Giles County, Tennessee, but reared in Mississippi. After attending the public schools as long as they were profitable to him, he entered at Lexington, Kentucky as a student, finishing the course there in 1890. On his return he engaged in teaching; was married June 4, 1893, to Miss Lucy Morrow, of Pontotoc County; moved with his wife to Oxford and entered the University in 1895, graduating in 1897, and taking his M.A. degree in 1900. In his senior year he was employed as fellow and advanced to Assistant in Chemistry immediately after graduation. In 1902 he was transferred to Physics and given charge of Electricity. In 1903 Electricity and Electrical Engineering, together with the general management of the electrical and heating plant, were assigned him as a separate department. In this he was doing excellent work till he was smitten down by typhoid fever and died August 21, 1906. He was a man of more than ordinary ability as well as of great moral worth, and was rapidly rising in his profession and in usefulness when the dark messenger of Death took him away.

LATIN.

ORGANIZATION.

The organization of this school is coincident with the establishment of the University. In the autumn of 1848 when the doors of the Institution were opened for the admission of students, they found a competent instructor in the classics, who, with three co-laborers, constituted the original faculty. The Board of Trustees had previously decided that the newly established seminary for learning should have a standard as good as the best.¹ The resolution which decided this important issue was proposed by General John A. Quitman, who, as a member of the first Board of Trustees of the University, did yeoman service in her behalf.

The requirements for admission in Latin were: "Five books of Caesar, the Eclogues and six books of the Aeneid of Vergil, Cicero's Orations." "The candidate must be well versed in the Latin Grammar, including Latin Prosody."²

The original course of study planned contemplated three years of college Latin as follows: "Freshman—Livy, Ovid— with antiquities, Latin composition and Prosody.

Three years of Latin were required for the Bachelor of Arts degree.

The graduate who desired a more advanced degree might obtain it by advanced work in this and other schools of the University, but only on the following terms: "The degree of Master of Arts shall not be conferred until two years after the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and to obtain it a regular course of satisfactory studies in each Department will be required."⁴

ANTE-BELLUM PERIOD.

The first Professor of Latin in the University was the Rev. John Newton Waddel, D.D. He was sprung from excellent lineage, his father being the Rev. Moses Waddel, D.D., who for a number of years was master of a famous classical school in Willington, South Carolina. He numbered as his pupils John C. Calhoun, William S. Crawford, Hugh S. Legare, Judge A. B. Longstreet and many others, who afterwards in church and state won distinction. In 1819 Dr. Waddel accepted the presidency of the University of Georgia, and remained at the head of this institution until 1829. In this year the son graduated at the early age of seventeen. Professor Waddel was prepared for college in a grammar school located on the college campus. He was introduced to the Latin grammar at the early age of eight, and when he entered college was already well grounded in the classics. His teacher was Mr. Moses W. Dobbins, a cousin, who had been taught by his father. At the University he took a good stand in a strong class, and upon his graduation devoted himself to teaching, first in South Carolina, then in Alabama, and finally in 1841 he removed to Mississippi and settled in Jasper County. Here he established Montrose Academy, one of the earliest classical schools in the State. The school prospered, and the success which attended his labors here paved the way to his subsequent election to the Chair of Ancient Languages in the University. It was shortly after his settlement in Mississippi that he decided that he would undertake the work of the Christian ministry, and having read theology privately, he was duly examined and licensed to preach. Upon the organization of the University Mr. Waddel was chosen a member of its first Board of Trustees, and as a member of the committee on courses of study was, in a large measure, responsible for the curriculum of the institution. He resigned his position on the Board and was elected Professor of Ancient Languages.¹ Professor Waddel remained a member of the faculty until 1857. He was at this time so strongly urged to accept the Chair of Ancient Languages in the Synodical College at La Grange, Tenn., that finally thinking it the call of duty he, with much reluctance, tendered his resignation as a member of the University faculty and undertook his new work. This institution was destroyed by the Civil War. Dr. Waddel was elected Chancellor of the University in 1865 and steered the institution safely through the dark days of reconstruction. In 1874 he resigned the chancellorship of the University and shortly afterwards was elected to the chancellorship of the Southwestern University at Clarksville, Tenn. After a number of years of useful service there he retired, spending his last years in quiet and study. His memoirs, written by him during this period, reveal to us a useful and well-spent life. As a teacher Dr. Waddel was eminently successful. He combined sound scholarship and the student's love for study with the ability to impart his learning to others. He insisted upon a thorough mastery of the elements of the language; a power to be acquired only by a study of the grammar and by Latin writing as well as extensive reading. He scorned for his pupils and for himself meretricious helps. The courses offered in Latin by him were in substantial agreement with those originally referred to, but it seemed wiser to postpone the reading of Juvenal until the Junior year, and this he did. The important position that Latin has held in the curriculum of this institution is in large measure due to the wisdom and learning of the first occupant of the chair.

¹"When I received from the Secretary of the Board, Col. Williams, the official notification of my election, I learned that the title of the chair I was expected to fill was 'Professor of Greek, Latin, Hebrew, French, German and Spanish.' No sooner had I read the statement than I at once decided to decline the offer, and I wrote the Secretary to that effect and asked for an explanation. In his reply he wrote that I would not be expected to give instruction in any languages except Greek and Latin. He gave as the reason for the addition of the other names to the title of the professorship that the Board desired to have it publicly understood that a department of language was contemplated in the system of instruction when complete, but that the amount of available means at the control of the University was inadequate as yet to admit of such an extension."—Memorials of Academic Life, Waddel, p. 255.

In 1856 the Chair of Ancient Languages was divided, and Professor Waddel choosing to retain the Greek, Professor Wilson G. Richardson, A.M., succeeded him as Professor of Latin. Mr. Richardson was a graduate of the University of Alabama, and had served his alma mater as a tutor. He subsequently studied in Rome, Berlin and Paris, and brought to the work excellent preparation, sound scholarship and enthusiasm for his subject. The standard for admission was now raised by the additional requirement of the Georgics of Vergil and three books of Ovid's Metamorphoses. This added requirement made more extended reading in the college course possible. He thus expressed his views of the work that his department should perform: "The history of this remarkable people, the state of the arts among them, their domestic life, public and private usages, their mythology, laws, education, geography and antiquities are severally developed in expounding Roman authors. Latin is not taught as an isolated language, but in its various and important relations to other tongues. The influence of the Greek language upon the Latin is noted and the Latin upon the modern tongues, with especial reference above all to its bearing upon our vernacular. Everything is made subservient to thorough English scholarship."¹ He emphasized the structural side of the language, and urged the importance of storing the memory with choice passages from the Latin writers. The Satires and Epistles of Horace were now given in the Freshman year,² and in the Sophomore systematic instruction in Roman history.

At their June meeting in 1860 the Board of Trustees elected Professor Alexandre J. Quinche to succeed Professor Richardson, who resigned during the previous session.³ The newly elected professor was of Swiss-Huguenot parentage, but was a native of Minnesota, being born at Fort Snelling in the year 1829. He received his collegiate education at the Columbian University, Washington, D. C., and some years after his graduation was elected a member of the teaching staff of his alma mater. After a single year of satisfactory service at the University of Mississippi, with other members of the faculty, he tendered his resignation, as the Civil War had rendered it inadvisable to attempt to continue the work at the University. But he remained on the campus, and during a portion of this time he conducted a school under the authority of the Board, having as his associate Burton Harrison, Esq., subsequently secretary to President Davis. He was made custodian of the University buildings, and probably saved them from destruction at the hands of the federals.¹

POST-BELLUM PERIOD.

When the University was reopened, in 1865, Professor Quinche was re-elected to the chair of Latin, and continued to fill this position for twenty-four years. His death occurred in August, 1889.

Dr. Quinche was a faithful teacher, and to the end of his life was a close student of the Latin language. But the old order had passed away and the School of Latin suffered with the others. There were few schools in the State to take the place of the many private schools where young men had received adequate preparation prior to the Civil War. The public High School was yet undeveloped. The catalogue no longer required a standard for admission that could not be met. First it was announced that four books of Vergil would be required for admission, the requirements in Caesar and Cicero remaining unchanged.

In 1880 the admission requirement was further reduced to two books of Caesar, two Orations of Cicero and two books of the Aeneid of Vergil.

For some years a Senior course was offered, extending through half the session, and this course compensated, in a measure, for the less efficient preparation. Beginning with 1887 the work in Latin was limited to the Freshman and Sophomore years. Dr. Quinche filled the chair for a longer period than any other occupant, and it was his good fortune to have under his instruction during this period many young men who have since attained positions of eminence in the State and Nation. Of this number are the present chief justice of the State, a member of the National Senate a bishop in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the three last chancellors of the University. An examination of the University catalogues of the period reveals the fact that Dr. Quinche introduced the best text-books as they appeared, and, further, outlined a course for the Master of Arts degree.

THE SCHOOL UNDER PROFESSOR HOGUE.

Professor Addison Hogue succeeded Dr. Quinche in this school.² He had for some years been at the head of the School of Greek, and in 1889 the two chairs were combined. During this period the requirements for admission were: Two books of Caesar and two Orations of Cicero, with corresponding work in Grammar and Latin writing. The course extended through only two years, but forms, syntax, Latin writing, and the reading of considerable portions of Cicero, Vergil, Livy and Horace were undertaken, and in addition Roman history and Roman religion were studied.

¹Dr. Quinche had lived in Illinois, where he had been associated with the relatives of General Grant. As a result he was enabled to have General Grant, who was the first Union General to enter Oxford, put a guard around the University buildings, and this protection was continued throughout the war.

² vid. Who's Who in America, Vol. V

This work was so effectually done that at the end of the two years' course the student was well prepared for more advanced work in this field. Thoroughness was the Professor's watchword. Graduate work was given more emphasis than ever before.

Professor Hogue is an able scholar, and was a strong and inspiring teacher. He left a lasting impression at the University, though he was at the head of this school for only a short time.

THE RECENT HISTORY OF THE SCHOOL.

Professor Alexander L. Bondurant, A.M., was placed in charge of the school upon the resignation of Professor Hogue, which occurred in June, 1893.¹ Mr. Bondurant had been connected with the work in classics for some years previously. He now found a school well organized, and possessing sound traditions with reference to the subject to be taught, so the problem that presented itself was to develop, broaden and enlarge the work already so admirably begun. From the beginning there has been kept constantly in mind and presented to the students as sufficient reasons to justify the study of this subject its disciplinary value, the aid which it affords in the mastery of English and the Romanic languages, and finally the value of the study as an end in itself by reason of its noble literature, and because through it one learns to know the laws and life of the greatest people of antiquity.

In developing the work, admission requirements, undergraduate, and graduate courses, and equipment have been considered. It was thought that no thoroughly satisfactory results could be obtained that did not take into consideration each of these as important factors. The standard for admission in Latin was first raised to a minimum requirement of four books of Caesar and four orations of Cicero, with corresponding work in Grammar and Latin Writing. The standard has been further raised by adding two additional orations of Cicero and six books of Vergil.² This means that four years of high school work are required.

The undergraduate courses have been extended from year to year until at present fourteen courses extending through four years are given in lieu of four courses extending through two years. These additional courses include Methods of Teaching Latin, Private Antiquities, Roman Religion, advanced Composition, reading courses in Roman comedy, elegy, the later satirists, Tacitus, Catullus and Pliny.³

The growth in numbers in the school has been commensurate with the growth of the University. In 1894 the number enrolled in Latin by classes was 70, for 1909-10, it is 160. The Freshman class is now divided into three sections and the Sophomore into two. At the beginning of the present period all the work of the school was done by a single professor, now there are two men, a professor and assistant professor, giving their whole time to the work, and an additional assistant, who gives five hours a week. Two years of Latin are required for the A.B. degree, but 84 per cent of those taking a bachelor's degree of any character whatsoever, exclusive of law, between 1893-1908, have included Latin in their course. All the Rhodes scholars sent from this State have taken Latin at the University, and only one student has passed the examination who has not studied here. On the second examination only one State, New York, had more students to pass the examination than Mississippi, and on the third examination this State led all the Southern States. During this period a number of books have been added to the Latin library, and a number of pictures and slides acquired.

Considerable emphasis has been placed upon graduate work and advanced courses have been offered in Lucretius, Roman Comedy, Roman Antiquities, and Ovid. A number of those who have completed this work have since engaged in teaching Latin.

In addition to the Professors already named the department has had connected with it the following:

GREEK.

The records show that the importance of Greek, both as disciplinary and cultural, has been recognized in the University of Mississippi from its foundation. The chair has been filled by men eminent as scholars and as teachers, as may be seen from the list below:

John H. Waddell, D.D., Professor of Greek	1848-1857
Henry Whitehorne, M.A., Professor of Greek	1857-1861
J. J. Wheat, M.A., Professor of Greek	1865-1886
A. H. Whitfield, M.A., Adjunct Professor of Greek ..	1872-1874
Addison Hogue, M.A., Professor of Greek	1886-1893
A. L. Bondurant, M.A., Professor of Greek	1893-1895
P. H. Saunders, Ph.D., Professor of Greek	1895-1905
J. G. Deupree, M.A., LL.D., Professor of Greek ..	1905-

Dr. Saunders was born and educated in Mississippi, taking at the University the degrees of B.A., M.A., and Ph.D. He is now President of the Commercial Bank and Trust Co., Laurel, Miss.

Prof. A. L. Bondurant has continuously held the chair of Latin in the University, since Greek and Latin were separated in 1895.

Prof. Addison Hogue, since 1893, has filled the chair of Greek in Washington and Lee University, Virginia.

Prof. A. H. Whitfield, after resigning the chair of Greek, practiced law in Mississippi, was Professor of Law in the University, and has been for years upon the Supreme Bench, being now Chief Justice of this State.

The others in the list just given have been summoned to the school above.

When the Board of Trustees, on the recommendation of the Faculty, abolished the Preparatory Department in 1892, it was deemed advisable to assign to Greek a position in the curriculum later than heretofore. A student who had not studied Greek was to be permitted to begin the subject at the University, provided he ranked not below Freshman in Latin.

Early in the fall of 1895 Dr. P. H. Saunders, as Professor of Greek, undertook to raise the standard so as to make the course in Greek commensurate in extent and advancement with that offered in other departments. The University authorities officially confirmed this action by joining the Association of Colleges and Preparatory Schools of the Southern States, one of the requirements for which was that a fair knowledge of forms and syntax, and at least three books of the Anabasis, should be required for entrance to the Freshman Greek class. This was about the scope of the advance before decided upon. The schools of the State were informed of the intended change, and were requested to introduce Greek if practicable.

The correspondence course, offered by the indefatigable professor, was a phenomenal success from its inception. Many ambitious teachers thus prepared themselves to teach Greek, and as a consequence about forty schools in Mississippi now have Greek in their courses of study, and the standard has been so raised as to justify the following:

ENTRANCE REQUIREMENTS.

The requirements for admission to the Freshman class will hereafter be a beginner's Greek book and four books of the Anabasis.

COURSES FOR 1909-1910.

- a 1. Xenophon (Agesilaus); Goodwin's Greek Grammar (used in courses a, b and c); reading at sight, Anabasis; five written exercises based on text, three prepared and two at sight. Four hours per week.
- a 2. Xenophon (selections from the Hellenica and Symposium); syntax of cases; reading at sight, Anabasis; six exercises, three prepared and three at sight. Lecture on Greek life with illustrations. Four hours per week.
- a 3. Homer (Odyssey, books I-IV); irregular verbs and syntax of moods and tenses to conditional sentences; reading at sight, Anabasis; six written exercises, three prepared and three at sight. Four hours per week.

- b* 1, 2. Plato (selections); syntax of moods and tenses; reading at sight, Hellenica; fourteen written exercises, seven prepared and seven at sight. Lecture on Greek philosophers. Four hours per week.
- b* 3. Euripides (Alcestis and Medea); review of grammar; reading at sight, Hellenica; seven written exercises, three prepared and four at sight. Four hours per week.
- c 1, 2. Sophocles (Ajax, Philoctetes and Women of Trachis); Prosody. Each student will be required to prepare a brief paper in Greek on some assigned topic. Two hours per week.
- c 3. Greek literature (Capps); reports on standard translations; reading at sight, Arrian (Anabasis). Lectures on influence of Greek literature on English writers. Two hours per week.
- d 1, 2, 3. Homer (Odyssey, books I-XXIV); Homeric Language and Verse (Seymour); Introduction to Homer (Jebb); paper on some assigned philological topic. Two hours per week.
- Senior elective. Open to those who have taken course c.
- dd* 1, 2, 3. New Testament; peculiarities of New Testament grammar. One hour per week.
- Course dd is open to students who have taken courses b or c. This course does not count for any degree.

GRADUATE COURSE.

- e* 1, 2, 3. Aeschylus (extant tragedies); Sophocles (Electra); Euripides (Electra); four papers on topics to be assigned; eight written exercises based on Lysias. Any B.A. graduate of the University of Mississippi, or of any university or college of like standing, will be entitled to count Greek for the M.A. degree on the satisfactory completion of course e.

Any student of the University taking courses a and b, completes the requirements in Greek for the B.A. degree.

Any student who completes course a is entitled to count the four hours thus made towards his graduation.

Courses marked  may be counted for either graduate or undergraduate work, but not for both. In these courses reports and papers will be required of graduate students in addition to the regular class work.

METHOD OF INSTRUCTION.

First Year.—The work of this year is in part devoted to a thorough and persistent drill on the inflections and in the elementary principles of syntax. Accuracy in form and accent is cultivated by the constant use of the blackboard and a correct pronunciation is secured by reading the accented forms from the board. Translation of English into Greek is practiced each day. The English sentences are given out on slips of paper, and the equivalent Greek is put upon the blackboard by the students. From fifteen to thirty lines are assigned for translation. Each student is given work each day.

Second Year.—In the Sophomore year the drill in inflections continues the principal parts of the most important irregular verbs are learned, and the rules of syntax are impressed by frequent questioning and by written exercises. A careful study of the geography of Greece is made, and the location and contour of important countries is impressed by map drawing. From thirty to fifty lines are assigned for translation, and sight reading is continually practiced and encouraged.

Third Year.—The same general plan of thorough drill in forms and syntax is followed here, though not so much time is given to it. Translation is emphasized and metrical reading is practiced.

Collateral reading from books to be found in the University library will be assigned each class.

Each student should have a Liddell and Scott's Greek-English Lexicon (abridged), and a good hand-book of mythology.

With the courses above offered it is interesting to compare the following as given in the catalogue of 1852-53:

FRESHMAN CLASS.

First Term.	Second Term.
Owens' Anabasis.	Owens' Iliad.
Greek Exercises.	Greek Exercises.

SOPHOMORE CLASS.

Owens' Odyssey.	Demosthenes De Corona.
Greek Exercises and Prosody.	Greek Exercises.

JUNIOR CLASS.

Greek Tragedies.	Greek Tragedies.
Exercises and Prosody.	Exercises and Prosody.

ROMANCE LANGUAGES.

(See also Germanic Languages and Latin.)

The Romance Languages belonged to the School of Modern Languages until 1905. Work in Modern Languages in the University of Mississippi was begun in the third year of its existence. Adolph Sadluski was elected Assistant Professor of Modern Languages in July, 1850, but as he did not appear for service the chair was declared vacant on the 29th of October, 1850.

William A. Strozzi, A.M., took charge of the work in 1850 (or 1851) and continued in charge until 1854. Dr. Waddel, in his Memorials of Academic Life (p. 305), says: "Sadluski was succeeded by a very unsuitable man, by name William A. Strozzi, also a foreigner, who was in office only two years. Both of these men came recommended as competent for the position, but perhaps there have rarely been found such complete failures as they both proved to be."

Professor Strozzi was succeeded by Wilson Gaines Richardson, A.M., who served to 1860. During the last four years of this period Professor Richardson held also the chair of Latin. He had enjoyed the advantages of classical study at Berlin and Rome, and had spent nearly two years in Paris. French and Spanish were the languages taught. "The method of instruction in these languages is substantially the same as set forth for Latin." "In Spanish the course is quite limited." (Catalogue.) Ticknor's History of Spanish Literature is one of the text-books put down in the catalogue.

Alexandre James Quinche, M.A., was the next professor in this department, holding the chair (along with Latin) for the year 1860-1861, and again for the first year after the resumption of university work at the close of the Civil War, 1865-1866. Dr. Quinche was born of Swiss parents at Fort Snelling, Minn., January 27, 1827. His boyhood was spent at Galena, Ill., and his higher education obtained at the University of the City of New York, and at Columbian University, Washington, D. C. During the Civil War Professor Quinche was left in charge of the University property, and on account of the acquaintance of his family with General Grant's, formed at Galena, he was able to save the buildings and collections.

In 1866-67 Dabney Minor Scales had charge of the department, Professor Quinche remaining in charge of Latin. French and Spanish were the languages taught, and were confined to the Junior and Senior years.

From 1867 to 1872 Professor Quinche again had charge of Modern Languages in addition to his duties as Professor of Latin. The last two years of this period he was acting Professor of Modern Languages, the professorship being vacant.

In 1872 Frederick A. Juny, S.T.D., took charge of the work and remained till 1876. Professor Juny was an Alsatian, who had at one time been a Roman Catholic priest, but was at this time an Episcopal clergyman. German appears to have been given for the first time during his occupancy.

Professor Quinche again assumed the responsibilities of the chair of Modern Languages in 1876 and held the position till 1881, continuing to serve as Professor of Latin all the while. Only French was given during this period.

In 1881 Charles Woodward Hutson, a South Carolinian by birth, became Instructor and in 1884 Professor of Modern Languages, continuing in office till 1889. French and German were regularly given, but there was no demand for Spanish. Professor Hutson had formerly been Professor of Greek in Louisiana State University, and was later Professor of History in the A. & M. College of Texas. He is the author of a History of French Literature and a Story of Language. (See Who's Who in America.) His present address is New Orleans, La.

Joseph Auguste Fontaine, Ph.D., succeeded Professor Hutson, holding the Chair of Modern Languages for two years, 1889-91. Professor Fontaine is a Frenchman. He went from Mississippi to Bryn Mawr, where from 1891 to 1900 he was Associate Professor of Romance Languages. Later he returned to France. He is editor of Merimee's Colomba.

The next occupant, Hans Schmidt-Wartenberg, Ph.D., likewise remained two years, 1891-93. Dr. Schmidt-Wartenberg is a German. He went from Mississippi to the University of Chicago.

Chiles Clifton Ferrell, A.M., Ph.D., succeeded Dr. Schmidt-Wartenberg in 1893, and continued Professor of Modern Languages till 1905, when the chair was divided between him and Calvin S. Brown, Dr. Ferrell retaining the Germanic Languages and Dr. Brown taking the Romance. Spanish was revived in 1901-02, after having been out of the curriculum for many years. Dr. Ferrell was born in South Carolina, spent his boyhood in Kentucky, took his Master's degree at Vanderbilt and his Doctor's at Leipsig. (See Who's Who in America.) His present address is Birmingham, Ala.

During the spring term of the year 1901-02 Calvin S. Brown was Acting Professor, while Dr. Ferrell was on leave of absence in Europe. Dr. Brown remained for the summer school, this being the first time Modern Languages were given in the summer term. During the year 1901-02 James V. Bowen, B.P., was fellow in Modern Languages. He is now Professor of Modern Languages in the A. & M. College of Mississippi.

Upon the division of the department of Modern Languages in 1905, Calvin S. Brown, D.Sc., Ph.D., took charge of the Romance Languages and remained in charge until the autumn of 1909.

French and Spanish have been regularly given since the establishment of the chair of Romance Languages in 1905, and Italian was added in 1907-08. In 1907 the students of French under the direction of Dr. Brown played Moliere's Le Malade imaginaire, and in 1908 Moliere's Le Bourgeois gentilhomme. Dr. Brown is a Tennessean by birth, a graduate of Vanderbilt University, and has studied and traveled extensively abroad. (See Who's Who in America.)

John L. Deister, B.A., was made Assistant Professor in 1908, and upon the transfer of Dr. Brown to the German department in 1909, was promoted to the full professorship. Professor Deister was born in Missouri, graduated at the University of that State, and has spent much time in Mexico.

GERMANIC LANGUAGES.

(See also Romance Languages and Latin.)

German belonged to the School of Modern Languages until that school was divided in 1905. In the earlier history of the University French and Spanish were the living foreign languages taught, German apparently not being given until Professor Juny took charge of Modern Languages.

Frederick A. Juny, S.T.D., an Alsatian by birth, a Catholic priest by profession, later an Episcopal clergyman, held the chair of Modern Languages from 1872 to 1876. Born in the city of Metz, Professor Juny spoke both French and German from childhood. To him belongs the honor of introducing German into the University.

Alexandre James Quinche, M.A., LL.D., professor of Latin, was put in charge of the Modern Languages after Dr. Juny left and held the chair from 1876 to 1881. He discontinued German, giving only French during his occupancy. Dr. Quinche was born of Swiss parents at Fort Snelling, Minn., on the 17th of January, 1827. His boyhood was passed at Galena, Ill., and his collegiate education was obtained at the University of the City of New York and at the Columbian University, Washington, D. C.

Charles Woodward Hutson came to the University in 1881 as instructor in Modern Languages, and in 1884 was advanced to the rank of professor. He held the chair until 1889. Under him German was restored and it has ever since held a place in the curriculum of the University. Professor Hutson was born in South Carolina in 1840, held the chair of Greek in the University of Louisiana for several years, and later, after leaving Mississippi, was Professor of History in the A. and M. College of Texas. (See Who's Who in America.) At present he resides in New Orleans.

Joseph Auguste Fontaine, Ph.D., a Frenchman, next held the chair of Modern Languages, his tenure being for two years, 1889-91. Upon his resignation from Mississippi he went to Bryn Mawr as Assistant Professor of Romance Languages and later returned to France, where he is still living.

Hans Schmidt-Wartenberg, Ph.D., a native German, held the chair from 1891 to 1893. After retiring from Mississippi he went to the University of Chicago.

Following Dr. Schmidt-Wartenberg came Chiles Clifton Ferrell, M.A., Ph.D., who held the chair of Modern Languages until it was divided in 1905 and from that time held the chair of Germanic Languages until 1908, when he resigned. Prof. Ferrell took his master's degree at Vanderbilt University and his doctor's degree at Leipzig, Germany. He is editor of Grillparzer's Sappho. (See Who's Who in America). Dr. Ferrell resides at present in Birmingham, Ala. During the spring and summer terms of 1901-2 Calvin S. Brown had charge of the department while Dr. Ferrell was on leave of absence in Europe. German was given then for the first time in the summer school. James V. Bowen, B.P., a graduate of this institution, was during 1901-2 teaching fellow in Modern Languages. He now holds the chair of Foreign Languages in the A. and M. College of Mississippi.

Upon Dr. Ferrell's resignation in July, 1908, Calvin S. Brown, Ph.D., Professor of Romance Languages in the University of Mississippi, was asked to take charge of the department of Germanic Languages for the following year in addition to his regular duties. With him was associated John L. Deister, B.A., as assistant professor. In 1909 Dr. Brown was permanently transferred to the chair of German and Prof. Deister took charge of the Romance Languages. Dr. Brown is a Tennessean by birth, a graduate of Vanderbilt University and the University of Colorado, and has studied in Germany and other European countries. He is editor of Tennyson's Poems and of the Later English Drama. (See Who's Who in America).

CHEMISTRY.

Though the University opened in 1848, there is no record of a chair for teaching chemistry until 1850. At that time John Millington, M.D., was professor of chemistry and geology. The science under consideration was taught in the Junior year. In 1853 J. C. Keeney, A.M., was professor of chemistry, analytical chemistry, agriculture and geology. Johnston's Turner's Chemistry was used as a text for first half of Senior year, with analysis and agriculture for the last half. It is recorded for 1854 that the Board of Trustees "at their late meeting in Jackson, erected a distinct professorship for instruction in geology, agriculture and analytical chemistry, which have heretofore been united with the chair of chemistry." A room was then being prepared for chemical analysis. In 1854 Lewis Harper, LL.D., held the position of State geologist and professor of geology, agriculture and analytical chemistry. In that year the professorship of chemistry, natural philosophy and assistant State geologist was vacant, being filled in 1855 by the election of E. W. Hilgard, Ph.D. In 1856 E. C. Boynton, M.A., late assistant professor of chemistry at West Point Military Academy, was chosen professor of chemistry, geology and mineralogy, the State survey having been detached from the University. The first full statement of the work offered in chemistry occurs in this year as follows: Instruction was offered only in the Junior year, with the laboratory enlarged and improved. "At each recitation every principle and fact of importance will be experimentally exhibited, accompanied by drawings and explanations intended to impart a more thorough understanding of the course than is usually secured by periodical lectures. An expensive and complete apparatus has been secured and facilities for instruction are second to none in the country." Instruction was also offered in physical chemistry, inorganic and organic chemistry.

In 1865 Dr. Hilgard, State geologist, was acting professor of chemistry. He outlined his course as consisting of "daily lectures, accompanied by illustrative experiments alternating with recitations," and stated that "although thus far no express provision has been made in the curriculum for students who desire to make chemistry a special study, a limited number of such may be admitted to a practical course in the laboratory by special arrangement." In 1856 he stated that "students may devote their entire time to this special department." The main text was Fownes. The course for the above work was announced in 1867 to consist of, for the first year, Chemistry (Roscoe, U. S. Dispensatory, Gmelin), Qualitative Analysis (Fresenius, Will, Plattner); second year, Organic Laboratory Work and Quantitative Analysis (Rose); and third year, Technical Chemistry and Original Research. Every catalogue during Dr. Hilgard's administration claims "a large and well appointed laboratory, excelled by none in the South." In 1870 the chemical department offered a course in pharmacy and in agricultural chemistry. The year 1872 records Dr. Hilgard as professor of chemistry and agricultural chemistry, with J. B. Adger, Jr., as adjunct professor. The latter seems to have had entire charge of the laboratory, the former serving chiefly as State geologist. Dr. Hilgard resigned in 1874, Mr. Adger remaining in charge. For the session of 1875-76 there seems to have been no one occupying the chair of chemistry, but it was announced that the two professors of chemistry to be elected would also open the newly founded school of agriculture and mechanic arts. Special students in chemistry were to be charged a fee of $75, with $25 additional for breakage.

In 1876 Dr. R. W. Jones was elected professor of chemistry and natural history, with L. L. McInnis, A.B., as tutor. Special post-graduate courses were offered. The next year T. D. Greenwood, A.B., tutor, died December 5th. During the following [session] J. M. Buchanan was assistant in chemistry. He remained until 1879. During the following two sessions J. W. Kilpatrick served as tutor. The course consisted of four hours of general chemistry and four hours of practical chemistry. W. E. Martin, A.B., was tutor for the year '81-'82. No tutors in chemistry are recorded from that year up to 1888. In 1885 Dr. Jones resigned and W. D. Hedleston, A.B., held the position of acting professor.

Woodville Latham was elected professor in 1886 and six hours per week of laboratory work was added to the Senior year for B.S. students. In the year 1888 a fellowship in chemistry was established to encourage post-graduate work. The compensation was $300 per year, and the holder was required to spend part of his time as instructor.

Dr. Jones returned to the University in 1889, with J. W. Provine, B.S., as fellow. Bloxam was the text for general chemistry, and Appleton for analysis. T. O. Mabry held the fellowship from '90 to '92, and the catalogue for 1891 gives figures to show the accuracy of the students in chemical analysis. In 1891 the texts used were changed to Richter, Remsen, Smith and Kellar and Thrope and Tait. The new courses were: for M.A., Remsen's Theoretical and part of Thorpe's Quantitative Analysis; for Ph.D., in addition to the above Cooke's Chemical Philosophy, Wurtz's Atomic Theory and selected methods. During the year '92-'93 Charles Strong held the position of fellow, his name also appearing in this capacity in the catalogues from 1895 to 1897. It was announced in 1892 that B.A. students could elect general or analytical chemistry, such classes having been confined to general chemistry theretofore. The laboratory that year commenced subscribing to the following journals: Chemical News, American Chemical Journal, Annales de Chimie et de Physique, besides others that were received by the general library. In 1893 the courses were changed to Sophomore, Elementary Chemistry, two hours; Junior, Inorganic and Organic Chemistry, three hours; Senior, Practical and Analytical Chemistry, ten hours. From '92 to '95 no Ph.D. courses were announced.

Eugene Campbell was elected fellow in chemistry in 1897, assistant in 1899 and assistant professor in 1901. A course in metallurgy and assaying was added in 1900, and inorganic preparations and electrolytic and gas analysis in 1902. For the session 1904-05 W. A. Stevens, A.B., served as assistant, and the courses are for the first time announced in complete detail in the catalogue. General Chemistry and Analytical Chemistry are arranged as two distinct schools. Altogether nine undergraduate courses are offered, besides several post-graduate courses. The following year A. H. Roop, B.S., served as assistant. In 1905 A. M. Muckenfuss, Ph.D., was elected professor of Chemistry, Dr. Jones having resigned, and C. W. Martin was the assistant. In 1906 the two schools of chemistry were merged into one, and G. L. Paddison, M.A., was elected assistant. The courses were rearranged and the course in metallurgy abandoned. Altogether six undergraduate and four post-graduate courses were offered. A new lecture room and a new Freshman laboratory were constructed. During the summer of 1908 the Board of Trustees let contracts for the complete remodeling of the chemical laboratory, so that at present it has practically all modern conveniences.

GEOLOGY.

On the organization of the University of Mississippi in 1848 the first faculty consisted of four members, one of whom was a professor of Chemistry and Natural Philosophy. There were thirty-five applicants for this chair, the election resulting in the choice of John N. Millington, M.D., then filling a chair at William and Mary College, Virginia. Dr. Millington was an Englishman by birth, a former associate and pupil of Faraday, and at the time of his election was seventy years old. We know little of the extent of Geological teaching at the University at this time, but it must have commanded some attention, for on March 5, 1850, the Legislature of the State passed an Act authorizing an Agricultural and Geological Survey of the State, the survey to be conducted from the University with Dr. Millington as chief Geologist. In addition to his work in Chemistry the trustees appointed him Professor of Geology and Agriculture.

In January, 1852, Professor B. L. C. Wailes was appointed Assistant Professor of Geology and Assistant State Geologist, succeeding O. M. Leiber. Wailes had come into Mississippi in an earlier day as a surveyor of land for the U. S. Government and had located at Washington, Miss. Dr. Millington being too old to go into field-work vigorously, Professor Wailes prosecuted the survey, while Dr. Millington did the class work and analytical work of the survey.

In 1853 Dr. Millington resigned his work at the University to accept a chair in Memphis Medical College, and John C. Keeney, A.M., was elected Professor of Chemistry, Agriculture and Geology. He served in this capacity but one session, Lewis Harper, LL.D., becoming Professor of Geology, Agriculture and Chemistry in 1854. Meanwhile Wailes had prosecuted the survey work, and in that year published his "Report on Geology and Agriculture of Mississippi," his name appearing as State Geologist at the request of Dr. Millington, who disclaimed the honor, since Wailes did the chief part of the work.

During these early years Geology was a required study in the Senior class, but the details of the work are not given in the catalogues of the time.

During the professorship of Lewis Harper, 1854-1856, he was also State Geologist. In 1856 he was succeeded by Edward C. Boynton, elected as Professor of Chemistry, Geology and Mineralogy, which is the first evidence of Mineralogy constituting a recognized part of the work. Boynton had been Assistant Professor of Chemistry at West Point. Harper continued as State Geologist until 1857, the Legislature having disassociated the position from connection with the Geological Department at the University. E. W. Hilgard, Ph.D., was Assistant Geologist under Harper and succeeded him in that capacity in 1857.

In the year 1856 the University purchased for the Geological Department the Francis Markoe collection of minerals, which grace our cabinets at the present time. At the same time the Budd collection of shells was purchased in New York, containing some 10,000 specimens. These could not fail to add interest and effectiveness to the teaching in these departments.

Professor Boynton, though a Northern man, continued his work at the University until the very outbreak of the war in 1861, when the University closed.

In 1860 Dr. Hilgard, who had diligently prosecuted the survey of the State, published his "Report on the Agriculture and Geology of Mississippi."

During the period of the Civil War all exercises at the University were suspended, though a small appropriation was allowed by the Legislature to pay the salary of State Geologist and defray necessary expenses for chemicals and apparatus for analysis.

On the opening of the University after the war E. W. Hilgard was elected Professor of Chemistry, Mineralogy and Geology, beginning his work in that capacity in the session of 1866-67. Professor Hilgard, though not a native of Germany, was of German parentage and received his Doctor's degree at the University of Heidelberg in 1853. On leaving the German University he was elected Chemist of the Smithsonian Institution, where he served until his election to the University of Mississippi in 1856. He infused into all his work the energy and thoroughness of the German Schools of Science.

In the following session, 1867-68, using the extensive collections of the various surveys of the State as a basis for more local study, a new course of Practical Chemistry and Geology was established, the Geological work being a special course in Mississippi Geology. Besides this, the course in General Geology was given as in previous years. This expansion of the department necessitated more workers, and the work became differentiated, Dr. Hilgard, assisted by R. H. Loughridge, doing the work in Chemistry, and Dr. George Little, assisted by E. A. Smith, Ph.D., doing the work in Geology. Dr. Little was from Alabama and had taken his Doctor's degree at the University of Gottingen, Germany, in 1859. Dr. Little was also State Geologist, having been elected two years previously, Dr. Smith being Assistant Geologist.

Up to this time the work in Chemistry, Natural History and Geology had been merged under one management. Now we find the instruction in Chemistry constituting one work and that in Geology and Natural History another, with two instructors in each. All students were required to take a half year of Geology and a half year of Mineralogy, three hours a week of the first and two hours a week of the last. It was a Senior work in all courses.

In 1862 Congress gave to each State a grant of 30,000 acres of land for each Senator and Representative, the proceeds to be used for the establishment of a College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts. By this grant Mississippi received 210,000 acres, but by Act of the Legislature this was divided, two-fifths of the land coming to the University, the other three-fifths going to Alcorn University. The proceeds of the sale of this land brought the University $75,600, with which a School of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts was established, one of the chairs in which was a chair of Agricultural and Economic Chemistry and Special Geology and Agriculture of Mississippi. In 1871 Professor Hilgard was elected to this chair, and was also made State Geologist, R. H. Loughridge being Assistant State Geologist and Adjunct Professor of Chemistry. Dr. Little was also one of the staff of instructors in the new school, having the chair of Geology and Mineralogy.

Under the provisions of the grant of land none of the $75,600 could be used in the erection of needed buildings, and as the Legislature failed to make the necessary appropriations for that purpose, the school began its work under a heavy handicap.

The School of Agriculture, which had now become an established feature of the University, chiefly through the enthusiastic and able efforts of Dr. Hilgard, suffered a very serious if not a fatal setback and the University a heavy loss when, in 1873, Dr. Hilgard resigned his position to accept one at the University of Michigan. His position in the Agricultural School remained unfilled. Dr. Little, though an able Geologist, gave little attention to the agricultural side of the subject.

In 1875 Dr. Landon C. Garland, Professor of Physics and Astronomy, was elected Acting Professor of Chemistry, Mineralogy and Geology. That one man should have been required to do the work that no less than five had been doing shows a wonderful shrinkage in the resources of the University. But when it is remembered that the State was in the throes of reconstruction there is little reason for surprise. Necessarily the School of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts languished.

In 1876 R. W. Jones, M.A., of Virginia, was elected Professor of Chemistry and Natural History, including Mineralogy and Geology. Under Dr. Jones, besides the courses of instruction in Mineralogy and General Geology, the special course in Mississippi Geology and Agriculture was revived. Now, for the first time in the history of the University, we find mention of the fact that Mineralogy was studied by laboratory methods. This, however, was required only of B.S. students.

The work proving too much for one man, in 1877 Thos. D. Greenwood, A.B., a brilliant graduate of the University was appointed Tutor to Dr. Jones. In 1878, Greenwood having died by accidental poisoning, Jas. M. Buchanon filled the place of Assistant Professor of Chemistry and Natural History. 1879-81 J. W. Kilpatrick was tutor in Natural History, followed by W. E. Martin, Dr. Jones filling the chief place until 1882, when Geology and Natural History were placed in a separate department under Dr. George Little. At this time Mineralogy was taught two hours a week for half a year, Geology three hours a week for half a year. He gradually increased the hours until in 1888 Mineralogy and Geology were each taught five hours a week for half a year.

In 1889 Natural History and Geology was again merged with the Department of Chemistry under Dr. R. W. Jones, with J. W. Johnson, A.M., Assistant. The work in Geology and Mineralogy continued under Professor Jones' management, with assistants elected from time to time, until 1894, when T. O. Mabry, M.A., was put in charge of Natural History, Geology and Mineralogy, as Assistant Professor.

Professor Mabry was succeeded in the work in 1899 by Dr. W. S. Leathers. In 1904 Professor Leathers was given an assistant, H. R. Fulton, now of Penn. Agricultural College. In 1905 E. N. Lowe was elected Assistant to Professor Leathers, doing chiefly the work in Geology and Mineralogy.

In 1906 Albert F. Crider, of the U. S. Geological Survey, was elected Professor of Geology. Professor Crider, on being elected State Geologist in the same year, resigned this chair to prosecute the field work of the Survey, after only a few months connection with the University.

The election of Professor Crider as Professor of Geology placed Geology in a department by itself for the first time in the history of the University. It had been variously merged with Natural History, Chemistry, Agriculture and Economic Chemistry, but never before had Geology and Mineralogy constituted one department.

Following the resignation of Professor Crider, Professor Calvin S. Brown, of the Department of Romance Languages in the University, was offered the chair of Geology, Dr. Brown being at that time Assistant State Geologist. Dr. Brown preferred to continue in the Language Department and declined.

E. N. Lowe was elected Acting Professor of Geology and Mineralogy. In 1908 he was elected Professor of Geology, a few months previously having been elected Assistant State Geologist, Dr. Brown having resigned his place on the Survey. With the beginning of the session 1908-09 the Department of Geology and Mineralogy was liberally fitted up with much needed apparatus and furnishings and the Museum of the State Collection has been rearranged and placed in suitable quarters in the Science Hall, so that it has been possible to expand the work along these lines.

The department embraces, 1st, a course in General Geology; 2d, a course in Mineralogy and Petrology; 3d, a course in Mississippi Geology and Mineral Products; 4th, a course in Physiography.

ENGLISH.

The history of the School of English in the University of Mississippi is broadly typical of the development of English studies in American colleges. It presents the same stages of evolution in general aspects, and these respective stages are rather closely co-incident with their development in the leading institutions of the country. We recognize four distinct periods of this growth. Given by years they are as follows: First period, 1848-1857; second, 1857-1873; third, 1873-1890; fourth, 1890 to the present.

The above division has been made under the guidance of two determining considerations. The chief of these was the character of the work undertaken as this work is indicated in the definite outlines of courses and in the descriptive statements of English study found in the catalogues; the other, which is chiefly determining only in marking the division of the second period from the first, is the recognition given by the Board of Trustees to English in its establishment as a separate department or in modifying it by the creation of separate "schools" embraced by the general department. It will be understood that growth has not been made wholly "by leaps and bounds." On the contrary, each stage reveals a tendency toward the fully developed standards, aims and ideals of its succeeding stage. It is true, however, that the years which marked the beginning of each period witnessed some decided, if not revolutionary, change of purpose in the English department.

The first period begins with the opening of the University and extends to the establishment of the "Department of English Literature" in 1858. Ex-Chancellor Mayes is authority for the statement, in his History of Education in Mississippi, that the late Dr. George F. Holmes, first president of the University, gave such instruction as was afforded in English. The catalogue of 1852-'53 shows that President A. B. Longstreet, in addition to his duties as president, had imposed upon him the task of teaching a half dozen subjects, one of which happened to be Rhetoric. This subject stood in the curriculum in the second term of the Sophomore year. The text was "Dr. Blair's Rhetoric," a very formidable, not to say impossible, book; but it was rich in classical flavor, abounding in allusions to, and quotations from, the best of Greek and Latin literatures. In the year 1856-'57 appear the names of N. M. Crawford, "Professor of Intellectual and Moral Philosophy," and of Wm. R. Barksdale, "Tutor in Rhetoric, Logic, Composition and Elocution." In the same catalogue, in the statements of departments, these names appear over the statement describing the "Department of Belles Lettres and Mental and Moral Philosophy." It appears that all the instruction in English studies was given by Mr. Barksdale. The work comprised English grammar in the Freshman year, rhetoric and punctuation in the Sophomore, and "the study of figures and the analysis of sentences" in the Junior. In the year '57-'58 Wm. T. J. Sullivan succeeded Mr. Barksdale in the position of Tutor.

At the time the University of Mississippi was founded the claims of English for co-ordinate recognition with Latin, Greek and mathematics were not admitted, even if such claims were advanced*. During this first period, however, there is a distinct movement towards the establishment of those claims. The appointment of an instructor, although his rank was only that of a tutor, to give instruction in English studies during parts of three years marks a development from the situation when the whole of English study was comprised in the study of rhetoric for half session under the president of the institution, who taught five other subjects.

In the year 1858 the second stage of the department's history is inaugurated by the election of Professor Wm. D. Moore, M.A., to the "Chair of English Literature." While the establishment of the chair did not result in any very decided advance in the courses given, the fact of its establishment is memorably significant. Few institutions in the entire country had at that time shown such appreciation of the importance of the study of the English language and literature, and, as far as I have been able to ascertain, no Southern college or university established the chair so early. The University of Virginia, greatest in influence and history of the universities of the South, has had courses in Anglo-Saxon since 1825, but the special department of the English language and literature was not established there until 1882.

The advance made under the professorship of Mr. Moore is embraced in the extension of English work to four years, the introduction of the "study of literature" in the Senior year, and the introduction of the study of Anglo-Saxon. As to what work was done under the indefinite phrase "study of literature" we cannot tell. There is recognizable in the departmental administration of Professor Moore a movement towards the study of philology, as indicated in the growing emphasis placed on the course in Anglo-Saxon. This was probably in recognition of the tendency of that time to give more importance to that branch of English in the representative institutions of the country. This movement was arrested

*The ends of English study were sought to be attained by two accessory features of college life. First, the literary societies were largely depended upon to supply training in composition; second, original speeches from senior students, and compositions, alternating with declamations, from the other classes delivered before the University body afforded additional training.

during the incumbency of Professor S. G. Burney, who succeeded to the chair in 1865, and it remained for his successor to give pre-eminent importance to that branch of English study toward which Professor Moore was gradually moving.

The features worthy of note under the administration of Professor Burney are: (1) the introducing of the study of the "History of English Literature," (2) the gradual elimination of Anglo-Saxon from the course of study, and (3) the announcement of post-graduate courses for such as might apply for them. During his incumbency the position of "Assistant in English Literature" was held by Edward Mayes (1869-'70), later eminent as Professor of Law and Chancellor of the University, and John W. Shields (1870-'72).

Professor Burney resigned after the session '71-'72. The professorship was vacant in the session '72-'73, and the department was in charge of Adjunct-Professor Shields.

The session '73-'74 begins the third period in the history of the department. Hardly any date, excepting perhaps that which marks the beginning of the fourth period, is so nearly epochal in the department's growth. In that year Professor J. L. Johnson came to the University as "Professor of English Literature and Provisional Instructor in Elocution." Professor Johnson had very definite convictions as to what should constitute a college course in English, and he announces at length and with enthusiasm the aims of his department. He had been educated at the University of Virginia, where he had learned to attach great importance to "Old English" as forming not only the basis but the body for English scholarship. He shows himself wholly alive to the educational movement of his time, at a period when representative institutions were recognizing the eminent claims of English for a large place in a college curriculum. Although time has proved that the body of English instruction in undergraduate courses should consist of work in literature and composition, Professor Johnson was in harmony with the accepted ideas of the leading English teachers of his day in giving over-shadowing prominence to the study of Anglo-Saxon and the historical development of the language. A single scientific fact which his work emphasized might alone be considered a revolutionary contribution. That was that the English language is not fashioned on the model of the Latin, but is a product of evolution, inseparable from the life of the people who spoke it. In Professor Johnson's first catalogue statement three out of the four years of the entire work were given to the study of language, and the courses were all based on the idea of historical development. The course of the Junior year is described by the following analysis: "Morris' English Accidence, Earle's Philology of the English Tongue, Professor's Lectures on Linguistic Science." The "joy in widest commonalty spread" could hardly have extended to the class in junior English in the '70's. The work of the senior year was given up to literature. In the first term "literary biography and the reciprocal relations of literature and history" were studied, with Shaw's Complete Manual of English Literature as a text. Hale's Longer English Poems and Rolfe's The Merchant of Venice were studied in the second term. It appears that, for some reason, the extensive work in Anglo-Saxon which Professor Johnson offered at first was somewhat abridged in the latter years of his incumbency. Co-incident with this there was some extension of the study of literature. A course in American literature, for instance, was first given in 1886-'87. In this fact we recognize again the law of evolution in these stages of growth; the gradual growth of literature courses was a movement toward the fourth stage where literature should come into its own as the most important part of English study.

Between stages three and four there is a transition of one year, the session of '89-'90. In that year Professor R. M. Leavell, since so widely loved and honored as Professor of Philosophy, Logic and Political Economy in the University, was called to the chair of English and Belles Lettres. The "school" of Belles Lettres was established upon the recommendation of Chancellor Mayes. A man of fine general literary attainments himself, he appreciated the importance of giving this special prominence to the study of pure literature, or "mere literature," as it was disparagingly termed by the conservative scholars in English of that time.

The fourth, and last, period of the school's development was signalized by the transfer of Professor William Rice Sims from the school of Mental and Moral Philosophy, Logic and Political Economy to the school of English and Belles Lettres. The early nineties make an important period in the teaching of English throughout the country. It is hardly too much to say that the period marks the complete establishment of modern ideas of English instruction. Two definite influences contributed largely toward this. One was the report of the English department of Harvard University on the teaching of composition and rhetoric, the other was the epochal report of the conference on English appointed by the Committee of Ten. The influence of these reports and the sum of undefined tendencies prevalent elsewhere are manifest in the development of the department of English in the University of Mississippi during the last decade of the past century. The most significant results are found in the introduction of entrance requirements that stress previous preparation in literature and rhetoric, in the differentiation effected between literature and linguistics, and in the further differentiation of practical rhetoric from each of these.

The altered character of English instruction here indicated gave greater influence and prominence to the school than it had had before. However, the new interest in English that characterized this period was not due chiefly to the increased attention given to literature. By all tokens Professor Sims added to a brilliant intellect unusual literary gifts and rare teaching ability. He retired from the University in 1895. In general ideas and purposes the school has not been altered radically since he held the chair.

In 1895 Professor Dabney Lipscomb, an alumnus of the University in the class of '79, was called to the chair. Under his administration the study of literature continued to hold the chief place as it had done under Professor Sims. The noteworthy feature of Professor Lipscomb's administration was the increased emphasis on entrance requirements. The statement in the catalogue of his first year describes his standard: "Some degree of literary culture must be evidenced by the applicant to be tested by a knowledge of the extent of his reading and by the manner in which he reproduces orally or in writing something that he has recently read." A list of literary works are suggested for this preparation. In the statement of the catalogue of the session '96-'97 the study courses of the Southern Association of Preparatory Schools and Colleges are adopted as entrance requirements in English.

The present occupant of the chair was elected in 1904. Two features may be noted in the history of the last few sessions. One of them manifests itself in the arrangement of the courses in literature according to a central purpose that gives unity to the course, such as the study of some literary form, the work of one great writer or the works of two or more great writers closely related, or the literature of a period; the other is found in the course for freshmen students, which consists almost wholly of work in composition.

The School of Belles Lettres was maintained from its establishment in 1889-'90 until 1905-'06, when, in view of the fact that the extensive inclusion of various types and periods of literature embraced practically all that had previously been given as Belles Lettres, upon the recommendation of the professor the school of Belles Lettres was absorbed by the School of English, and the distinction, which in reality had ceased to exist, was no longer maintained in the catalogue.

The School of Rhetoric was established in 1897 and Professor Franklin L. Riley was called to the professorship of Rhetoric and History. This relationship was continued for three sessions. In 1900 the School of Rhetoric was attached to the schools of English and Belles Lettres, and Professor Lipscomb was given charge of all. This grouping was maintained until the session of 1905-'06 when Professor Hubert A. Shands was called to the chair of Rhetoric and Oratory. At the end of that year, however, rhetoric was again attached to the School of English, and this arrangement is still retained.

The courses offered in the schools of English and Rhetoric for the session 1909-'10 are found published in the current catalogue.

Professor David H. Bishop has been Professor of English since 1904.

HISTORY.

No provision was made for direct instruction in history in the University of Mississippi in the first decade after its establishment. With the exception of a reading course in Voltaire's Histoire de Charles XII, in the School of French, and of a course in Browne's History of Greek and Roman Classical Literature, in the Schools of Greek and Latin, History was not then taught even incidentally in the institution.

The first efforts to supply this deficiency seem to have been made in 1857 by Prof. Wilson G. Richardson, of the Department of Latin and Modern Languages. Faint symptoms of such a development are to be found, however, in an announcement that appeared in the catalogue of the tenth session (1857-58). It reads as follows: "The history of the Roman people, the state of the arts among them, their domestic life, public and private usages, their mythology, laws, education, geography and antiquities, are severally developed in expounding Roman authors." In the catalogue of the following year Roman History appeared in the summary of courses for a full session of the Sophomore year. The following works were "recommended to students": "History of Rome to the Third Punic War—Arnold; From the Third Punic War to the Empire—Liddell; From Augustus to the Antonines—Schmitz or Putz; From the Antonines to the Capture of Constantinople by the Turks in 1453—Smith's Expurgated Gibbon; For the Earlier period of Roman History—Niebuhr."

In the catalogue of the following session this announcement was repeated and a course in English and American History for the first half of the Senior year was added. It is impossible to ascertain, however, what texts were used or in what department the subjects were taught.

During the first five years after the War of Secession the only historical instruction in the University was a course in Roman History given by the Professor of Latin to students in the Sophomore class.

Upon the adoption of a new curriculum in 1870, General History was prescribed in every course leading to a Bachelor's degree, as follows: Half of the Freshman year for B.S. students, the entire Sophomore year for B.A. and B.P. students, and the entire Senior year for Engineering students. Wilson's Outlines was the adopted text in all of these classes. History and Political Economy were given for the first time a place among the optional studies for the M.A. degree. History was added to the chair of Metaphysics, Logic, and Political Economy, then held by James A. Lyon, D.D. Two hours a week were devoted to this subject. It is interesting to note that in the catalogues of that period the scope of the History course is shown by the expression "Ancient, Middle and Modern History, Ancient Geography and Chronology."

It seems that at this time (1870) the early creation of a separate chair of History and Political Economy was contemplated, since these subjects appear in the catalogue for the first time as a separate school. But in a note which follows an announcement is made to the effect that "for the present" this chair and that of Metaphysics and Logic "shall be filled by the same incumbent."

In the catalogue of 1872-73 Dr. Lyons' name appears as "Professor of Metaphysics and Logic, Provisional Professor of Political Economy and History." Mr. A. H. Whitfield*, who had graduated with first honors in 1871 and had served as Assistant in Greek during the following session, was then (1873) given additional work as instructor in History. In the same year a prize of forty dollars for efficiency in History was awarded to James M. Sharpe, of Pike County. Two years of History was required of B.S. students and a two hours course in the same subject was also required of Freshmen students in the newly added "School of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts."

* See biographical sketch in the current volume of Who's Who in America.

At the end of the following session Mr. Whitfield was promoted to the rank of Adjunct Professor of Greek, and the subject of History was dropped from his title. Although no provision seems to have been made at that time for teaching history, a prize of forty dollars "for proficiency in History" was that year awarded to J. W. Kilpatrick, of Corinth, and Thomas W. Stockard, of Lowndes County. The usual references were made to History in the summaries of courses, but no mention of the subject is found in the detailed statements of the different schools of the University.

In the catalogue of 1876-77 the name of Gen. Alex. P. Stewart appears as Chancellor and Professor of History. No changes were made at that time in the History courses for University classes, but the subject was added to the curriculum of the preparatory department, United States History (Swinton's) being required in the second term of the first year. History was not, however, a required subject for admission to the University or to the School of History.

In the following year General Stewart was given the work in Political Economy in addition to his other duties. History was then prescribed for the first year in the B.P. course and the third year in the B.A. course, but was omitted entirely from the B.S. course.

This requirement continued until 1880 when history was given throughout the third year in the B.A. and B.P. courses. At that time a two years' course in United States History was required of preparatory students, Swinton's and Ridpath's texts being used. Two years later the preparatory course was reduced to two years, and the subject of United States History was given in only one of them.

No further changes appear in the announcements of history courses until 1884, when the prescribed work in that subject was reduced to the latter half of the fourth year for B.A. and B.P. students.

In the catalogue of 1885-86 appears the statement that "History has been assigned temporarily to the Professor of Modern Languages." It appears, however, that this assignment was unsatisfactory, as Chancellor Stewart continued to give instruction in Ancient and Modern History and Chronology during the second term of the Senior year in the courses for the B.A. and B.P. degrees, and the required work in Greek and Roman History was given by the Professors of Greek and Latin respectively. An undesignated course in "History" was also prescribed for the second term of the Junior year for B.A. students. Roman History in the second term of the Freshman year and an undesignated course in "History" throughout the same term of the Sophomore year were prescribed for the B.S. degree.

In the following year the work in History was assigned "temporarily" to the chair of Modern Languages, then held by Prof. Charles W. Hutson.* The catalogue of that year stated that History was "a required study in the B.A. course; not in any other." The following extract from the catalogue of 1887-88 indicates that Professor Hutson accepted the new assignment with some misgivings: "The time forbids any thorough exploration of so vast a field. It is assumed that the student comes to it here with some preparation received in the training schools and from private reading. During the half year's daily attendance on lectures, with some practice in individual research, the student's mind is impressed with an outline of the science of history. The method of instruction is partly by lectures." The reader will appreciate the situation if he will bear in mind the fact that, in addition to his work in History, Professor Hutson was expected to give courses in French, German, Spanish and Italian.

In 1889 "A School of History, of one year's course" is published as one of the nineteen schools of the University, "each being independent of the others." In the same year Prof. W. R. Sims became "Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy, of Logic, of History and of Political Science." The extent of his history work is indicated by the announcement of only one course in the subject ("General Sketch of Mediaeval and Modern History, Geography and Chronology"), and this extended through only half of a session. An entrance examination in United States History was then required for the first time for admission to this school, but not for admission to the University.

The annual catalogue for 1890-91 announces a post-graduate course on "Mississippi as a Province and as a Territory, based on the Claiborne collection of original manuscripts," which had been recently deposited at the University by an Act of the State Legislature.

In 1890 Prof. P. H. Eager* became Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy, Logic, History and Political Economy. He was assisted by a worthy young law student, Mr. A. B. Amis, whose official title was "Tutor in History." A special course in English History was then added to the curriculum. In the following year five hours a week for a half session were required in Mediaeval and Modern History with extra readings "on epochs of commanding interest." The same time was also devoted to a course based on Greene's Short History of the English People.

In 1891 Professor Eager was succeeded by Professor R. M. Leavell.† In the following year Mr. L. B. Howry became Fellow in History. A course in American History was then announced in connection with that in English History, the work in the latter subject being probably abridged to provide therefor.

In the session of 1893-94 the History course was given by Professor Leavell without an assistant. The work was then organized as follows: Ancient History, throughout the Sophomore year, two hours; Mediaeval and Modern History with some work in English and American History throughout the Junior year, three hours. Both of these courses were made conditional requirements for the B.A. degree, choice being given between them and Logic and Political Economy. They were also offered in electives for the B.S. degree.

In a course of study for high schools published in the catalogue for 1894-95 no mention is made of Ancient History or Mediaeval and Modern History, and, strange to say, United States History and English History appear under the title "An English Course for High Schools."

*See biographical sketch in the Publications of the Mississippi Historical Society, VII, 171.

†See biographical sketch in the current volume of Who's Who in America.

In 1895 Mr. R. E. Wilbourn became Fellow in History and English, which position he held for two sessions. During this time there was an increased amount of library work in connection with the History course. Readings were regularly assigned in addition to the text-book and special examinations were given in the same from time to time.

To relieve two over-crowded schools, the subjects of History and Rhetoric were temporarily combined to form a new chair in June, 1897. Franklin L. Riley, Ph.D., *then President of Hillman College, was elected to this position with the title of Professor of History and Rhetoric. Formal historical instruction in Greek and Roman History by the schools of Greek and Latin was discontinued in 1899, all of the work in Ancient History being given to the new chair. After the combination of History and Rhetoric in the same chair had continued three years, the development of the History work necessitated their separation. The subject of Rhetoric was then given back to the chair of English, the Professor of English being given an assistant, and the former Professor of History and Rhetoric was given the chair of History, which position he still fills.

The rapid growth of the School of History led, in 1905, to the employment of Beverly W. Bond, Ph.D., † as Assistant Professor of History. As a result several new courses were added in the following session. But in pursuance of a policy of retrenchment, in June, 1906, the assistant professorship was abolished. This necessitated the reorganization of the work at the beginning of the next session and the cancellation of four of the courses which had been announced. The development of the School of History was thereby temporarily retarded. After the opening of the session of 1906-7 a slight degree of relief was afforded the school by the appointment of Mr. J. C. Johnson to the position of Reader in History. In the following session Mr. S. P. Walker became Reader in History, Mr. Johnson having become Professor of Oratory. In the same year a legislative appropriation of upwards of a thousand dollars was made available for the purchase of books for the School of History.

Little progress was made in the development of the school in the session of 1908-09, though some important plans were made which have characterized the work of the current year. At present the Professor of History is assisted by two Instructors, Mr. Fred M. Witty and Mr. S. P. Stubblefield, and by a Fellow, Mr. A. D. Somerville.

Certain phases of the development of this department since 1897 are here given a topical treatment, as follows:

ENTRANCE REQUIREMENTS.

The subject of United States History was required for admission to the School of History in 1897. Four years later the requirement was raised by the addition of a year's work in General History. In 1904 a year's work in Ancient or Mediaeval and Modern History was substituted for the requirement in General History. Beginning with the session of 1910-11 three years of high school work will be required for entrance to University classes in History, as follows: One year each in Ancient History, in Mediaeval and Modern or English History, and in United States History.

HISTORY COURSES.

In 1897 a Senior optional course of three hours in the Political and Constitutional History of the United States was added to those hitherto offered. Four years later a two-hour optional course in English Constitutional History was added to the curriculum. A course of two hours a week in Nineteenth Century History was first offered in 1904. Upon the addition of Dr. Beverly W. Bond to the teaching force in History in 1905 two other new courses were given as follows: Diplomatic History of the United States, two hours a week throughout the session, and Methods of Teaching History, one hour a week throughout the session. In 1907 a seminary course in American History was given for the first time. In the following session a two hours lecture course in Political History of the South was introduced. The History work was also made to begin in the Freshman instead of the Sophomore year. The following courses in History are being given in the current session:

COURSES OPEN TO UNDERGRADUATES.

MISSISSIPPI HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

The Mississippi Historical Society was organized at the University of Mississippi in 1890, and was incorporated by the Legislature in the same year. Its membership has always embraced many members of the Faculty of the University, and its first Secretary and Treasurer was Dr. W. R. Sims, who was then Professor of History in connection with other subjects in this institution.

During the first four years after its organization, the Society held frequent meetings and collected some relics and documents, the most important being the Claiborne collection of manuscripts. No contributions to State history were prepared or publications issued under its auspices. Then followed a period of four years, during which the Society was in a moribund state.

Shortly after entering upon his work as Professor of History and Rhetoric, in 1897, the present Professor of History was requested to accept the position of Secretary and Treasurer of the then defunct Society. A successful effort was made to awaken wider interest and to enlist a larger membership.

Throughout its history this Society has had its headquarters at the University of Mississippi. Its policies have for the most part been outlined by the secretaries who have been connected with the School of History in this institution. The students and alumni of the University have also been among the most valued contributors to State history since 1897. The School of History in the University of Mississippi has rendered the following services to the cause of State and Southern History since 1897:

1. Reorganized the Mississippi Historical Society and enlarged its activities.
2. Stimulated interest in original research by means of public historical meetings.
3. Procured special biennial legislative appropriations for State History.
4. Directed the work of the Mississippi History Commission, which prepared the most elaborate report ever published on the documentary sources of State History.
5. Induced the Legislature to establish a State Department of Archives and History, with headquarters in the Capitol.
6. Edited ten volumes of Publications (4,517 pages), which contain 238 contributions relating to almost every period and phase of State History.
7. Edited A Political History of the South ("The South in the Building of the Nation" Series.)

ORIGINAL RESEARCH.

With a view to promoting an interest in original research, the University Historical Society was organized in April, 1898. Monthly meetings were held and several valuable contributions to State History were read before it during the period of its activity. It did not fully meet the demands of the situation, however, as no provision was made whereby the Professor of History could give personal direction to the investigations of students. In 1906 a Historical Seminary was organized, which has since fully met the needs. During the three years of its existence some valuable original work has been done in the local history of reconstruction in Mississippi, as follows:

- E. C. Coleman, Reconstruction in Attalla County.*
- W. H. Braden, Reconstruction in Lee County.†
- F. M. Witty, Reconstruction in Carroll and Montgomery Counties.‡
- J. E. Reed, Reconstruction in Lauderdale County.
- C. A. Williamson, Reconstruction in Lafayette County.
- I. C. Nichols, Reconstruction in DeSoto County.
- C. G. Wood, Reconstruction in Lincoln County.
- F. M. Ball, Reconstruction in Simpson County.
- F. P. Smith, Reconstruction in Yalobusha County.
- H. B. Edwards, Reconstruction in Noxubee County.
- E. G. Hightower, Reconstruction in Perry County.
- Hattie Magee, Reconstruction in Lawrence County.
- E. F. Puckett, Reconstruction in Monroe County.

BIOLOGY AND PHYSIOLOGY.

It seems that the work of this school was done for the first time in the University in the form of natural history. The catalogue of 1869-'70 includes a description of the courses under the direction of Dr. E. W. Hilgard. Doctor Hilgard was the professor at that time of Biology, Chemistry and Geology. During the year of 1870-'71 Dr. George Little was made State geologist and Eugene Smith, Ph.D., now State geologist of Alabama, was elected as assistant geologist. It appears that a few elementary courses were given in the institution in the biological subjects. For the following two or three years the courses were enlarged to some extent, but there was very little if any laboratory work done. The chair was declared vacant during the year 1875-'76. Beginning with the year 1876-'77 Richard W. Jones was made professor of chemistry and natural history, with Louis L. McInnis, A.B., as tutor. During the session of 1877-'78 Mr. Greenwood continued as tutor and Dr. James M. Buchanan, now at the head of the State insane asylum at Meridian, served as the assistant in Chemistry. From 1879-'81 Joshua W. Kilpatrick acted as tutor and William E. Martin was elected to fill this position for the year 1881-'82. In June, 1882, the Board of Trustees deemed it advisable to divide the chair. Dr. Jones was continued as the professor of Chemistry and Dr. George Little was elected to fill the chair of Natural History. This arrangement was continued until the year 1889, when Doctor Little resigned and Dr. Richard W. Jones was again chosen to the combination chair of Natural History, Geology and Chemistry. It was evident that the work was too heavy for one man and Dr. John W. Johnson was made assistant professor of Mathematics, English and Natural History in 1889-'90, and Thos. Ovid Mabry served as tutor in the department. During the same year Frank Clark Holmes, B.S., was elected as a fellow in Natural History and Geology. For the first time in the history of the University the work in Natural History was separated from that of Chemistry, and Thos. Ovid Mabry, M.S., was chosen as the assistant professor. In June, 1895, Prof. Mabry obtained a leave of absence and Dr. W. S. Leathers filled the vacancy until April of 1896 when Prof. Mabry returned to the institution. The position was filled most acceptably by Prof. Mabry until June, 1898 when he resigned. The chair remained vacant for a period of one year, and in June, 1899, Dr. W. S. Leathers was elected to fill the vacancy as an assistant professor. The Board, in 1903, made the chair a full professorship, and at that time the medical department was organized and this necessitated the appointment of an assistant in the department. Mr. Harry Fulton was chosen for this position. At the close of this session Mr. Fulton resigned to accept a fellowship in the University of Missouri and Dr. E. N. Lowe, who was at the time doing graduate work in the department, was elected to the position. Owing to the demand for geological work and the enlargement of the biological department it was decided to divide the chair in June, 1908, into Biology and Physiology and Geology. Dr. E. N. Lowe was then made the professor of Geology and Mineralogy and Dr. W. S. Leathers was continued as the professor of Biology and Physiology, with Mr. Robert C. Rhodes, M.A., of Vanderbilt University acting as the assistant in Biology and Physiology.

The work of the department has steadily developed and at the present time it has the largest attendance in its history.

ORATORY.

The history of the School of Oratory and Elocution in the University falls naturally into two periods, the first extending from the founding of the University to the year 1885, the second from 1885 to the present time. During the first period instruction in public speaking was given in conjunction with the work of other schools. During the second period public speaking has held the rank of a distinct school.

The earliest discoverable announcement of this work is that published in the catalogue of 1853-'54, under the heading of Elocution and Composition. "Two members of the Senior class, in alphabetical order, deliver original orations on each Monday afternoon in the presence of the faculty and the students assembled. The three lower classes declaim, also in rotation, and exhibit original compositions on the first Monday of each month to their respective professors." This seems to have been the mode of training used through all the earlier years of the institution up to the year 1856.

It may be observed, in passing, that all the old catalogues announce the Hermaean and the Phi Sigma Literary Societies as student organizations, established for the improvement of their members in Elocution, Composition, Extempore Speaking and Debate, and commend these societies as "most important auxiliaries in promoting the great objects of the institution." The first formal instruction in Elocution was given in 1856-'57 along with English, Rhetoric and Logic in the department of Belles Lettres, Moral and Mental Philosophy under Professor N. M. Crawford, D.D., and Mr. W. R. Barksdale, B.A., tutor. The text-books used were Caldwell's Manual of Elocution and Rush's Philosophy of the Voice. This course was continued in the same department the next year, but was under charge of Mr. William T. J. Sullivan, Tutor in Rhetoric, Logic, Composition and Elocution. When, in 1858, English Literature became a separate department under Professor William D. Moore, M.A., Elocution was included in this department and was required as an accompaniment of the work in English throughout the course. This arrangement continued till 1861.

From the resumption of University work in 1865 till 1868 Professor

S. G. Burney, D.D., of the department of English Literature offered a course essentially the same as that just mentioned above, basing his work upon Caldwell's Manual of Elocution, and requiring compositions and declamations throughout the course. In the catalogue of 1867-'68 the Board of Trustees announce their offer of two gold medals as prizes to students of the Sophomore class for excellence in Elocution. The year 1868 is marked by the separation of Elocution from the department of English, provision then being made that "the practical exercises of all the college classes in Elocution and English Composition be under charge of the department of Logic, Metaphysics and Political Science." Professor F. A. Shoup, M.A., was the head of this department. This arrangement continued also from 1869 to 1872 under Professor James A. Lyon, D.D. During the last two years of this work Professor Lyon gave a Junior course in The Principles of Eloquence. The next year, however, Elocution was shifted back to its former position. The catalogue of that year announces a department of English Literature, Composition and Elocution, under Adjunct Professor J. W. Shields, B.A. In 1873 Professor John Lipscomb Johnson was placed at the head of this department, with the title of Professor of English Literature and Provisional Instructor in Elocution. Doctor Johnson conducted all training in public speaking, then, continuously up to the year 1885, giving instruction in Enunciation and in Gesture, and requiring in all courses weekly exercises in class debates and in declamation.

While it is regretted that the catalogue statements of courses offered in Oratory during the first period are, in the main, so brief and general as to give but an inadequate notion of the scope and character of the instruction, yet, from the scholarship of the professors who had charge of the work and from the distinction achieved by men who were trained here—the best criteria—it must be inferred that this subject, in spite of its subordination to other schools, maintained a high standard of excellence.

The Board of Trustees, on June 25, 1884, passed a resolution ordering "that the matter of the election of a teacher of Elocution in this University be referred to the committee to meet and report to the Board in August." The report of this committee was as follows: "That the Executive Committee be authorized to employ a suitable man, specially fitted for that duty, to teach Elocution, at a monthly salary, for such time during each term as they may find it expedient to employ such teacher." This resolution was adopted. At the meeting of the Board, on June 27, 1885, a motion was made "that Miss Sallie McGee Isom be and she is hereby employed, at the salary and on the terms now paid to tutors, to teach Elocution in this University during the ensuing session." Action on the matter, however, was postponed until the following September. On September 2, 1885, the motion was adopted. Within a few years, however, the merits of the school thus established were recognized, the salary of the instructor was raised and work done in the school was counted toward the baccalaureate degrees. Miss Isom's announcement of her courses of study, as found in the catalogue of 1886, was substantially as follows. "The purpose of the course is to produce effective readers and speakers, to substitute natural methods of expression for the faulty delivery prevalent in the pulpit, on the platform and on the stage. The course covers the entire range of expression. To professional students it is a course practically necessary, and to others it is of great value as conducive to health and personal accomplishment." The subjects of study were: Physical Training, Respiration, Vocal Culture, Articulation, Gesture, Inflection, Emphasis, Analysis, Dramatic Reading. The text-books used were: Shoemaker's Practical Elocution, Best Things from Best Authors, Selected Plays of Shakespeare, The Delsarte System of Oratory. The general plan of the work remained essentially unchanged up to 1905. Near the end of April of that year the chair was made vacant by Miss Isom's death. In her death the University lost a most conscientious and efficient instructor, and the cause of Elocution a most ardent advocate and an artist of the highest rank.

The School of Elocution was succeeded the next year by a School of Rhetoric and Oratory under charge of Professor Hubert A. Shands, Ph.D. The courses of study offered by Professor Shands were courses in Rhetoric and Composition, including Poetry and the short story, and courses in Argumentation and Debate. At the end of the session of 1905-'06 the department was discontinued and for two years thereafter no oratorical work at all was offered by the University. In June, 1908, in response to a petition of the students of the University the school was re-established under the name of the Department of Oratory, and Professor John Clarke Johnson was placed at the head of it. Briefly stated the courses of study now offered include both Elocution, with training in Vocal Expression and in Gesture, and Oratory proper, with study and practice in Argumentation, Brief Drawing and Debate, in the composition and delivery of original orations, and in Extempore Speaking.

FINE ARTS.

Throughout the year 1907-'08 a course in the history and appreciation of the fine arts was given by Dr. Calvin S. Brown, professor of Romance Languages. The course dealt especially with architecture, sculpture and painting, but touched upon music, poetry and the minor arts, such as pottery, metal work, stained glass, mosaics, etc. The course was restricted to Juniors and Seniors and enrolled twelve students. Near the end of the year an art exhibition was held, embracing reproductions of many famous paintings, statues and buildings, paintings by local artists and examples of brass, bronze, copper, pottery, cameos, etc., loaned from the homes of Oxford and the University.

THE DEPARTMENT OF LAW.

The Department of Law was established in the year 1854 by an Act of the Legislature, which amended the charter of the University in response to a memorial of the trustees of the institution presented in their behalf by one of their number, the Honorable Jacob Thompson.

William F. Stearns, LL.D., a prominent member of the Holly Springs Bar, was elected to the "Chair of Law and Governmental Science" thus created.

The prescribed course of study for the degree of bachelor of laws included two sessions of ten months each.

It is interesting to note that at that early date a composite course of law and letters was given as indicated by the following statements taken from the catalogue:

"The Senior Collegiate Class and the Junior Class of law students proper pursue together, under the instruction of the law professor, the studies of International and Constitutional Law." Likewise law students were allowed, without extra charge, to attend lectures in the schools of letters and science with the consent of the professors.

The Socratic method of instruction was adopted with provision for occasional lectures to seniors upon "local law and practice peculiar to Mississippi."

By enactment of the Legislature, in 1857, the diploma conferring the degree of bachelor of law was made sufficient evidence of learning in the law to entitle the holder to a license to practice in the courts of the State.

Mr. Stearns conducted the department with marked ability. He was a northern man by birth, but had, previous to his election, spent many years in the practice of his profession in Mississippi. He discharged his duties with efficiency, and continued in the service of the University until 1861 when its doors were closed because of the civil war. After the war, sad to relate, Mr. Stearns died by his own hand.

In 1860 the Legislature, by amendment of the charter of the University, created and endowed a second chair of law. The trustees in due time elected to this chair the Honorable James F. Trotter, of Holly Springs, who had adorned, successively, the Circuit, Chancery and Appellate bench of his State.

In 1861 all the departments of the University were closed. In 1867 the Department of Law was reorganized. The Hon. Lucius Q. C. Lamar, that prince of teachers, was elected to the chair and continued to perform its duties until 1870 when he resigned to enter Congress. The Hon. J. A. P. Campbell was chosen as Mr. Lamar's successor, but did not accept the office. Henry Craft, Esq., of the Memphis Bar, was then elected, but he does not seem to have occupied the chair.

Col. Jordan M. Phipps, a distinguished alumnus of the University, was elected adjunct professor, and taught the class of 1870-'71.

Chancellor Thomas Walton, also a distinguished alumnus of the institution, was made professor of law in 1871 and served till 1874. Dr. Edward Mayes, another distinguished alumnus, succeeded Mr. Walton and, while Chancellor of the University, conducted the department of law until 1892 when he resigned. Albert Hall Whitfield, now Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Mississippi, followed Mr. Hayes and served till 1894 when he resigned to go on the bench. Governor Garvin D. Shands was then called to the place, and during his administration, on account of the increased attendance and extended scope of instruction, it became necessary to revive the second chair of law, which had been suspended in 1861. This was done in 1897, and Thomas H. Somerville, of the Winona Bar, was elected to this chair. The office of dean of the department of law was created, and Governor Shands elected thereto. The course in Constitutional Law was enlarged. Private International Law, Insurance and Equity Pleadings and other topics were added to the curriculum.

In 1905 Governor Shands resigned to accept the chair of Common Law in Tulane University; thereupon Mr. Somerville was made dean of the department and the Hon. Clarence L. Sivley was elected to the vacant chair. In 1906 Mr. Sivley resigned the place to accept a lucrative office as railway attorney in the city of Memphis. To the vacancy thus created the Hon. J. Elmore Holmes, of the Hernando Bar, was elected. Both Mr. Sivley and Mr. Holmes were honored graduates of the Law Department.

Grateful recognition of the faithful service of distinguished lecturers should be here recorded. For many years the Hon. Jehu A. Orr, of Columbus, and the lamented Horatio F. Simrall, late Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Mississippi, were accustomed to visit the University each session and devote a week to instruction by lectures on important topics of their own choosing. The Hon. Robt. A. Hill, late U. S. District Judge, long maintained the habit of greeting the class at the opening of the session, and during the year usually delivered a lecture on Federal Procedure. Each of these gentlemen was a trustee of the institution for many years. The first named still survives and is retained as a member of the staff of lecturers.

During the present administration the course of study has been extended. Two full sessions of nine months each are now required for graduation. Plans are on foot for material improvements.

It would be pleasant to advert to the attainments of the graduates of the school and to speak of their usefulness in the various walks of life and of their ability and efficiency in the service of the people, but the attempt would extend this paper beyond its legitimate limits. The roster of graduates and students published in this volume will register the contribution of the law department to the interests of the public and include the names of many who are high in authority, State and federal. It would be needless and cumbersome to reproduce their names here. All the incumbents of the Supreme bench are alumni of this school.

Let it suffice to point to the agency of the Law Department in the cause of legal education. As shown in the foregoing sketch Thomas Walton, Edward Mayes, Clarence L. Sivley and J. Elmore Holmes have all served their alma mater as teachers, and the Hon. Lauch McLaurin, another distinguished graduate, is professor of law in the University of Texas.

DEPARTMENT OF ENGINEERING.

Courses in Engineering were first offered in the University immediately after the close of the Civil War. In 1865 a chair of Physics, Astronomy and Civil Engineering was organized and General Alexander P. Stewart took charge as its head. He, however, retained the position only a few months and General Francis A. Shoup succeeded him. Gen. Shoup remained at the head of the chair from 1865 to 1867. In 1867 Physics and Astronomy were combined into a separate chair, with Dr. Landon C. Garland in charge, and General Shoup retained Civil Engineering as a separate chair, its name, however, being changed to Applied Mathematics. He resigned in 1868 and for four years thereafter the Engineering work was discontinued, save Surveying, which was given in connection with Pure Mathematics by General Claudius W. Sears. In 1872, under the influence of General Sears, the work was again introduced and the chair of Mathematics and Civil Engineering was instituted, with General Sears at its head. This chair was continued until 1875, when the Civil Engineering was again abolished, and thereafter, with the exception of some work in Plane Surveying given by General Sears in connection with Pure Mathematics, no further attempt was made to offer Engineering courses in the University until the fall of 1900, when the present department was organized.

The work of the department during these early years of its history included courses in Mechanical Drawing, Surveying, Descriptive Geometry, Mechanics, Hydraulics, Materials of Engineering and short descriptive courses in framed structures, masonry, highway construction and similar subjects, all this latter work being given as one composite course in the Senior year. It is both interesting and instructive to note that, even in these early years, when the South was stricken with material poverty because of the war and when there were available little of funds to purchase necessary equipment, that even with all these difficulties the courses offered measured well up to the standards of those times. That they should have been given at all is due to the heroism of those distinguished men who were in control and who, in the roles of teachers, displayed no less ability than they had exhibited as generals in the Confederate Army. But in spite of their efforts the work failed for lack of support and for lack of interest in it upon the part of young men. During all these years, though many students took one or more of the courses in Engineering, only twenty became candidates for the degree of Civil Engineer as offered by the University, and of these twenty only two graduated. It was too soon after the Civil War for Southern educational ideas to change, and Civil Engineering at that date in the South was not regarded as a profession. Hence, few young men of talent and education could be induced to adopt it. Indeed the necessity for the radical change in her educational methods has been realized by the South only after a lapse of some thirty or forty years, and even now that change is in progress.

In June, 1900, the Board of Trustees authorized the introduction of Engineering courses in connection with Pure Mathematics, and during the session 1900-'01 courses in Surveying and Drawing were given by the Professor of Mathematics, Dr. Alfred Hume. In the same year a chair of Electricity and Electrical Engineering was established and Professor Douglass S. Anderson put in charge. The equipment, both in Electricity and for Surveying and Drawing, was very meager and any extensive work was impossible.

In June, 1901, Professor Anderson resigned and Professor Arthur W. Smith was made Professor of Electricity and Electrical Engineering. Professor Walter H. Drane was elected assistant in Mathematics and Civil Engineering, and, in addition to the work given the previous year, three other courses in Civil Engineering were offered—one in Analytical Mechanics, one in Descriptive Geometry and one in Roofs and Bridges—the first and second by Dr. Hume, the third by Prof. Drane.

In 1902 Professor Smith resigned, the chair of Electricity and Electrical Engineering was abolished and Electricity was combined with Physics and put in charge of Dr. John W. Johnson, the Professor of Physics. Professor Drane was made assistant in charge of Civil Engineering, the work, however, remaining under the general direction of the professor of Pure Mathematics, Dr. Alfred Hume. No additional equipment could be purchased, but the work was still further extended by the introduction of new courses and the attendance continued to increase. The Legislature, in the winter of 1903, made considerable appropriations for equipment and for a building, the latter fund being used to put additions to the Lyceum Building, several rooms of which were allotted to the use of Civil Engineering, Electricity and Electrical Engineering. Accordingly, in June following this appropriation, the Board of Trustees re-established the chair of Electricity and Electrical Engineering, and Professor Eugene Campbell was put in charge as full professor. Professor Walter H. Drane was made full professor of Civil Engineering, which was also made a chair separate from Pure Mathematics. Large additions were made to the equipment and the work was again enlarged and extended by the introduction of new courses. This at once had its effect upon the growth of the work for the attendance immediately increased, the total enrollment being 43, the class enrollment being over 100. During the years 1903-'04, 1904-'05, 1905-'06 the work in Engineering prospered and grew in magnitude and importance. So much so that in June, 1905, Professor Robert H. McNeilley was elected assistant in Civil Engineering. It seemed that nothing was needed but work and patience to make the department second to none of its kind in the South, when its support was cut off by lack of appropriation by the Legislature. Curtailment became an absolute necessity, and in June, 1906, the chair of Electricity and Electrical Engineering was again abolished and the work restored as a part of Physics, under Dr. John W. Johnson. Professor Robert H. McNeille resigned and Professor J. H. Dorroh succeeded him, he, however, being made assistant professor of Civil Engineering. In 1907 all the work of Electricity and Electrical Engineering was combined into one professional department, with Professor Walter H. Drane in charge and Professor J. H. Dorroh as assistant professor in charge of Electricity and Electrical Engineering. In June, 1908, the chair of Municipal and Sanitary Engineering was created and Professor J. H. Dorroh put at its head as full professor, also acting professor of Electrical Engineering. Professor Drane remained as the head of the department and professor of Civil Engineering. In that same year the chair of Geology was made a part of the Engineering department and Professor E. N. Lowe put in charge.

It has been omitted to mention that early in this latter history of the department a School of Mines and Mining Engineering was established and courses published in the catalogue for several years, but no professor was ever appointed and practically nothing was accomplished. Accordingly, in 1906, this school was abolished and the chair of Municipal and Sanitary Engineering established in its place.

As at present organized the Engineering Department comprises four schools, viz.: Civil Engineering, Electrical Engineering, Municipal and Sanitary Engineering and Geology. Professor Walter H. Drane is acting dean of the department and professor of Civil Engineering, Professor E. N. Lowe is professor of Geology and Professor J. H. Dorroh is professor of Municipal and Sanitary Engineering and acting professor of Electrical Engineering. While the department has never recovered from the curtailment of its support there are signs that there will be healthy growth in the future if a suitable building and sufficient equipment can be obtained. The attendance is on the increase and more and more interest is being manifested in its work by the young men.

Some idea of the growth of the department since 1900 can be gained from the following approximate data: In 1900, 15 students were enrolled, about 12 units of work were offered, including that in Electricity, and the value of the equipment was about $2,000, including the electrical equipment; only one professor was in the department as such.

At present the department occupies seven rooms in the Lyceum building and one in the new Science Hall; its equipment, though by no means adequate, may be estimated to be worth $6,000; there are 50 units of work offered; since 1900 the number enrolled for degrees has been in the neighborhood of 200; the total number of graduates about 25; total number of students taking one or more courses in the department about 300, and there are three full professors in the department.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION.

The history of the School of Pedagogy was traced in the last historical catalogue from the first suggestion of Chancellor Mayes that such a school be established with Dr. Deupree, then a Professor at Mississippi College, as its first Professor, to the incumbency of the chair by that honored Mississippi teacher and veteran soldier. In the present short sketch the history of the department as a separate professional division really begins.

In 1893 the Chair of Pedagogy was established, with James Underwood Barnard as Professor. He served three years and returned to Missouri to become Principal of a High School in Kansas City, where he remained till his death in January, 1909.

In 1896 J. G. Deupree was elected to the Chair of Pedagogy to succeed Professor Barnard, and held the same till 1905, when he was transferred to the Chair of Greek. The annual catalogues show progress and growth, and in 1903 the Department of Education, with J. G. Deupree as Dean, was established. At that time the School of Psychology, previously associated with Philosophy under the honored Dr. R. M. Leavell, was transferred to the Department of Pedagogy. and Dr. T. P. Bailey, who had served the Universities of California and Chicago, was made Professor of Psychology and Applied Psychology. Mr. J. W. Bell, who had attracted the attention of the Board by his successful work as Superintendent of city schools, was appointed High School Visitor and Associate Professor of Pedagogy. Professor Bell served two years and then accepted a flattering call to the professorship of Mathematics at the Industrial Institute and College, at that time presided over by our present able and devoted Chancellor, Dr. A. A. Kincannon. In 1905 Mr. Robert Torrey, the efficient Superintendent of Schools of Yazoo City, succeeded Professor Bell as School Visitor and served one year. The office was then discontinued until the present year.

In 1905 Dr. Deupree was transferred to the Department of Greek, a branch he loved and had taught for a number of years. Dr. Bailey was made Dean of the department and Professor of Psychology and Education. Miss Eula Deaton, the accomplished and beloved Dean of Women, was appointed Lecturer in the department and served efficiently until her retirement from the University. In 1906 the Department of Education was temporarily abolished, because it was supposed that a shortage in funds necessitated a decrease of the teaching force. But four weeks later, acting on a petition from the State Teachers' Association and the students of the University, the department was reinstated by unanimous vote of the Board.

In 1908 Chancellor Kincannon asked the Dean of the Department to undertake the arduous but important task of working up the high school system of the State in connection with the co-operation of the General Education Board. Dr. Bailey was continued as Dean and took the title of Professor of Psychology and Secondary Education. The splendid spirit and cordial co-operation of the teachers of the State makes it possible for this standardising and constructive work to be one that promises great things for the high schools and the University. At this time a course for teachers wishing to work for professional license and to equip themselves for greater usefulness was instituted. Mr. Robert Torrey, formerly High School Visitor, was called from his superintendency at Jackson to take charge of this work, with the title of Professor of Pedagogy.

Reference to the current catalogue will show that the department has developed a flourishing teachers' club with fifty members; has secured the co-operation of the Oxford Graded School in the training work of the department; has greatly developed the institute conductors' course under the direction of the Dean of the department, and is striving in every legitimate way to make the department as useful as possible to the University and to the cause of education in the State.

The State institutions and the denominational and private colleges are joining the high schools of the State in giving hearty co-operation to the work of the department. When the Legislature is kind enough to help the department train leaders in education through the establishment of scholarships, the department will be in a position to render its full service to schools in the upbuilding of Mississippi's schools so admirably begun by Preston, Kincannon, Whitfield, and being continued by our zealous and progressive State Superintendent, J. N. Powers. Many whose names we do not mention have helped in this noble work, and the Department of Education hopes that their work and ours will soon put Mississippi where she belongs naturally—among the leading educational States of the Union.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

It is interesting to know that as early as the year 1870-71 the Board of Trustees passed a resolution relative to establishing a medical department in the University. On the minutes of the Board will be found a resolution which reads: "This professional school will be organized and put in regular operation upon the plan in the University of Virginia, which has proved to be so eminently successful, just as soon as the resources of the institution shall have increased to a sufficient amount to admit it, and hopes are entertained by the friends of the University that the time will not be delayed much longer when this shall be realized." This statement is included in the catalogue from 1870-79. Doubtless the development of this important work was confronted by so many difficulties that the head of the institution could not foretell the future prosperity of the University with sufficient accuracy to predict the time when the action of the Board pertaining to a department of "Medicine and Surgery," as it was termed, could be carried into effect and so it was excluded from the catalogue of 1880.

It seems that the matter was held in abeyance until Dr. R. B. Fulton, then professor of physics and astronomy, was elected to the chancellorship of the University. After making several attempts with varying degrees of success, the first two years of the medical course were organized in June, 1903.

During the first four years of the work the conditions were so unfavorable that results were accomplished with marked difficulty. The quarters in which the greater part of the course was being given consisted of two rooms in the Lyceum, the dissecting being done in a small frame building about fifty yards to the north of the Lyceum building. The construction of this building was made possible at the time by a gift from Hon. Harry Howard, then an honored member of the Board of Trustees. The faculty had to solve many troublesome problems and among them was the securing of cadavers. This was done with some degree of inconvenience until the meeting of the Legislature January 1, 1905. Realizing the necessity of teaching this important branch in a satisfactory manner, it was deemed advisable to place a bill before the Legislature asking that all unclaimed bodies of the State Charity Hospitals be turned over, under the supervision of the State Board of Health, to the medical department of the University. The bill on first presentation passed the Senate, but, owing to the agitation of a certain feature of it, the motion was entered for a reconsideration and after a heated debate the measure was tabled and was not recovered during this session of the Legislature. Without any particular reason the medical department of the University was forced to go through another period of hardship and labor. The bill was again introduced at the next meeting of the Legislature and, by subjecting it to severe analysis previous to its discussion by the committee, it was recommended for passage and was made a law without any material opposition.

The medical department has now quite commodious quarters in Science Hall, erected during the session of 1906-07.

Owing to the prevailing idea that it was necessary to have a large city in order to teach medicine there were many physicians in the State who were inclined to oppose the organization of a medical school in Mississippi, but in view of the radical changes which have been inaugurated in the best medical colleges of America those who were interested in the making of a greater University of Mississippi, on carefully studying the question became convinced that the undertaking was in thorough accord with the modern methods of instruction in medicine. So the first two years were given with the understanding that the last two years should be added as soon as the University could come into possession of a hospital in which the clinical branches would be properly taught.

In March, 1908, Chancellor Andrew A. Kincannon was approached by Dr. B. B. Martin and Dr. E. F. Howard relative to accepting the State Charity Hospital located at Vicksburg to be used for the purpose of establishing the last two years of medicine as a part of the Medical Department of the University of Mississippi. Those gentlemen expressed the opinion that the Board of Aldermen and the Board of Supervisors of Warren County were disposed to turn over the hospital to the University for medical teaching, and if the Chancellor cared to consider the proposition the necessary papers would be drawn up and matters made in every way satisfactory to the authorities of the University. Chancellor Kincannon, realizing the need of medical education in the State, called a meeting of the Board of Trustees in Jackson, March 28, 1908, for the purpose of considering the acceptance of the State Charity Hospital as part of the University property and to be used in connection with the medical department. The Board appointed at this meeting a committee consisting of the Hon. W. E. Baskin, Hon. J. T. Senter and Hon. J. L. Taylor, to make a trip to Vicksburg to investigate the hospital relative to accepting it as property of the University to be used in the development of the medical department.

At the next meeting of the Board the hospital was accepted. It was the intention at this time to begin the work of the last two years of the course in September, 1908, but owing to the limited time intervening between the acceptance of the hospital and the opening of the following session, it was thought best to defer the election of the Faculty for the course of the last two years and the making of other arrangements at Vicksburg until the succeeding year.

The first faculty of the Department of Medicine consisted of the following professors and lecturers:

R. B. Fulton, M.A., LL.D., Chancellor of the University.

R. W. Jones, M.A., LL.D., Professor of General and Medical Chemistry.

W. S. Leathers, M.D., Professor of Biology and Physiology.

James B. Bullitt, M.A., M.D., Professor of Anatomy and Pathology.

P. W. Rowland, M.D., Acting Professor of Materia Medica.

J. W. Johnson, M.A., Ph.D., Professor of Physics.

Eugene Campbell, B.P., M.A., Professor of Electricity.

Thomas H. Somerville, LL.D., Professor of Medical Jurisprudence.

Harry R. Fulton, B.A., Assistant in Biology and Physiology.

Woodson A. Stevens, B.S., Assistant in Chemistry.

J. M. Buchanan, M.D., Lecturer on Physiology of Nervous System.

J. A. Crisler, M.D., Lecturer on Minor Surgery.

H. A. Gant, M.D., Lecturer on Hygiene.

J. F. Hunter, M.D., Lecturer on Physiology.

H. L. Sutherland, M.D., Lecturer on Pathology.

A. A. Young, Lecturer on Pathology and Bacteria.

DEPARTMENT OF PHARMACY.

Realizing the need of a college of Pharmacy in the State, on July 1, 1908, the University of Mississippi added such a department coördinate with those already established. Accordingly, on September 24, 1908, the doors of the department of Pharmacy were opened for the reception of students. The first faculty was constituted as follows:

Andrew A. Kincannon, LL.D., Chancellor.

Thomas H. Somerville, LL.B., LL.D., Professor of Medical Jurisprudence.

Waller S. Leathers, M.D., Professor of Physiology and Botany.

Peter W. Rowland, M.D., Professor of Materia Medica.

Anthony M. Muckenfuss, Ph.D., Professor of Chemistry.

Henry Minor Faser, Professor of Practical and Theoretical Pharmacy.

George Lucas Paddison, Assistant in Chemistry.

Fifteen students applied for entrance with the opening of the session, and the department has very flattering prospects of something like thirty-five students in both classes with the opening of the second year. When we consider the fact that quite a number of the most reputable colleges of Pharmacy opened their doors with a smaller number than we have enrolled, and when we consider further that the department was established only two months before the opening of the session, we have reason for being highly satisfied with the enrollment we have made.

The aim of this department is to provide instruction for students who desire to acquire the special training necessary for the successful practice of Pharmacy. The importance both to the pharmacist and to the public of a thorough, scientific training in Pharmacy, is now fully recognized. The course extends throughout two collegiate sessions, nine months each. Every student taking the course is given eight hundred and sixty-four hours of lectures and recitations and nine hundred and thirty-six hours of laboratory work. The department is admirably equipped for doing excellent work. The three laboratories are provided with all the necessary fixtures and conveniences for all general purposes, and contain fully equipped stands with reagents; and, for each student, a closet with apparatus under his own lock and key.

The chemical laboratory is located in the Lyceum building. During the past year the University has expended $4,500 in repairing and increasing its equipment. The pharmaceutical laboratory is located on the first floor, west end of the new Science Hall. It is one of the finest and best equipped rooms of its kind to be found anywhere. It is spacious, airy, well lighted and well ventilated, and has individual working tables and lockers for each student. Gas and water are supplied at each stand and large washing sinks are amply provided to meet every requirement. Briefly put, we have every convenience needed to carry out the purpose of this department successfully. The practical Materia Medica and Botany laboratory is located on the second floor of the Science Hall. This is a large and convenient room. The desks are designed for microscopical work, and appropriate illumination is supplied for each pupil. The ample laboratory equipment consists of both simple and compound microscopes of the most approved patterns, all the principal microscopical accessories, modern reagents, mounting material, etc.

The lecture halls are large and spacious; each branch of the department has its own lecture room, and each is provided with comfortable chairs to accommodate one hundred students. The lecture rooms and laboratories are lighted by electricity and heated by steam; they have been carefully arranged so as to give the greatest comfort to the student and the best conveniences to the teachers. Each subject of the department is taught by a specialist in his particular branch. The department has established high and thorough standards and confidently expects to contribute service to the profession through the increasing number of graduates that it shall send out from year to year.

PRESIDENTS AND CHANCELLORS.

GEORGE FREDERICK HOLMES, LL.D.

Born in Guiana, South America, in 1820, a graduate of Durham University, in England, George Frederick Holmes came to the United States in 1838. After teaching school for several years in Virginia, Georgia and South Carolina, and, though unnaturalized, having been admitted to the bar in South Carolina by special act of the Legislature, he was elected, in 1847, Professor of History, Political Economy and International Law in William and Mary College, Virginia. July 12, 1848, at the age of 28, he was chosen the first President of the University of Mississippi. The arduous duties of his office, made unusually trying by the turbulent spirit of the student body, proved too great a strain upon his physical strength, and in April, 1849, President Holmes returned to Virginia to regain his health and for the benefit also of that of some member of his family. Commencement came and he had not returned or been heard from, though it is said that he had written and was on the eve of starting southward. In his absence the Board of Trustees unanimously declared his office vacant, and elected Augustus B. Longstreet, of Georgia, his successor. Dr. Holmes became Professor of History and Literature in the University of Virginia in 1857 and for forty years was eminent in his service to that great institution, noted for his legal attainments as well as for his researches in history and literature. He was the author of a number of textbooks for Southern schools, and by the series of readers which bear his name is now perhaps most widely known. His death occurred November 4, 1897.

AUGUSTA BALDWIN LONGSTREET, LL.D., D.D.

Under conditions peculiarly unfavorable, the second President of the University entered upon the discharge of his difficult and delicate responsibilities. But the Trustees had evidently chosen wisely. Disorder diminished, attendance increased and the reputation of the University was improved and extended. "Judge Longstreet," as he was best known, was born in Augusta, Georgia, September 22, 1790. He was prepared for college by Dr. Moses Waddel at the once famous "Willington Academy" in South Carolina. In 1813 he graduated at Yale College, and then studied law at Litchfield, Conn. Returning to Georgia he rapidly rose to distinction as a lawyer and orator. He was appointed judge but declined the office, and was entering upon a canvass for Congressional honors, with confidence of election, when an irresistible call to preach caused him to give up his prospects of wealth and political preferment and enter the humbler but, as he testifies, happier life of a Methodist itinerant. Ere long the circuit-rider was transformed into the college president, and for thirteen years Emory College, Georgia, felt his gently, firmly, guiding hand, and entered fully on its career of usefulness and honor. He resigned the presidency of Emory College in 1848 and shortly after was elected President of Centenary College, Louisiana. In 1849 he was unanimously chosen President of the University of Mississippi, having failed of the election the year before by only one vote. As has been stated, under his wise administration discipline was enforced and rapid progress was achieved. Owing chiefly, it seems, to dissensions in the faculty, and to some extent among the trustees, President Longstreet, in July, 1856, tendered his resignation. It was accepted with regret and under protest by the Board of Trustees. From 1857 to 1859 he was President of the University of South Carolina. After the war, which suspended that University and others in the South, he returned to Oxford, Miss., where, in his eightieth year, July 9, 1870, he died in the midst of his family and friends. His remains now rest under a handsome monument near the entrance to the Oxford Cemetery. As a preacher he was earnest, deeply spiritual and persuasive, though it is said he never attempted eloquence in the pulpit. His political and educational writings were sound and forcible. As the author of "Georgia Scenes," humorous sketches of early nineteenth century life in Georgia, autobiographical in part, "Judge Longstreet" holds a secure place in Southern literature. It may be added that he is said to have deprecated the work in his latter days, and even sought to suppress it. He as President, his son-in-law, L. Q. C. Lamar, as Professor, and Edward Mayes, son-in-law of Lamar, as Chancellor, have largely shaped the destiny of this University.

FREDERICK AUGUSTUS PORTER BARNARD, S.T.D., LL.D., L.H.D., D.C.S.

This distinguished mathematician, physicist and educator, third President and first Chancellor of the University, was born in Sheffield, Mass., May 5, 1809. He graduated from Yale in 1828, and a few years later, for the improvement of his health, sought educational work in the South. From 1833 to 1848 he was Professor of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy in the University of Alabama, and from 1848 to 1854 of Chemistry and Natural Philosophy in that institution. As the successor of Dr. A. T. Bledsoe, he became Professor of Mathematics, Natural Philosophy and Civil Engineering in the University of Mississippi in 1854. That year, a Oxford, he was ordained a priest of the Episcopal Church by Bishop Greene. Succeeding President Longstreet in 1856 he at once addressed himself earnestly to the task of broadening the curriculum and equipping more completely the scientific departments. His published "Letter to the Trustees" and his address before the Legislature made a deep impression in favor of higher education and secured for the University a liberal appropriation. By this means the Observatory Building was erected, apparatus for it and the chemical laboratory provided, and the valuable collections in the biological museums purchased. A very large telescope was ordered, but never received on account of the outbreak of war. In 1858 Dr. Barnard's title was changed from that of President to Chancellor. When the doors of the University were closed in 1861 Chancellor Barnard returned to the North, and in 1863-64 was connected with the U. S. Coast Survey in Washington. Through his influence, in part, the buildings and other property of the University were not destroyed by the Federal Army. He was chosen President of Columbia College, N. Y., in 1864, and with that institution his name and fame are inseparably associated. He found it in 1864 a second or third rate college and left it at his death, in 1889, one of the leading institutions of learning in America. Barnard College, the annex for women to Columbia University, appropriately bears his name for he was always a warm advocate of the higher education of women. In recognition of his valuable services to the cause of science and education, degrees and honors were showered upon him and high trusts were committed to him. In 1860 he was a member of the Labrador Eclipse Expedition, sent out by the Coast Survey. The same year he was elected President of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. He was one of the United States Commissioners to the Paris Exposition in 1867. His publications were chiefly scientific and educational. Shortly after his death in New York, April 27, 1889, in Harper's Weekly there appeared a noble tribute, from which this as the central thought is taken: "The death of Dr. Barnard deprives American Science of one of its foremost representatives; Columbia College of the ablest and most successful in its line of presidents."

JOHN NEWTON WADDEL, D.D., LL.D.

The son of the Rev. Moses Waddel, D.D., founder of "Willington Academy," and afterward President of the University of Georgia, Chancellor J. N. Waddel was born at Willington, S. C., April 2, 1812. He attended first his father's school and then the University of Georgia, from which he was graduated in 1829 with distinction. For a year or two he taught in the "Willington Academy" and then turned to farming. In 1837 he moved with his small family to Greene County, Alabama, and in 1840 he settled in Jasper County, Mississippi. The year following he entered the ministry of the Presbyterian Church, and soon thereafter established "Montrose Academy," which in a few years became the educational center of Southeast Mississippi. As one of the charter members of the Board of Trustees of the University, Dr. Waddel rode horseback from Jasper County to Oxford, over two hundred miles, in April, 1847, to attend a meeting of the Board. He was appointed Chairman of the committee to arrange a course of study, and his report was, at the next meeting of the trustees, adopted, in spite of a vigorous effort by two of them to strike "Evidences of Christianity" from the course. Having resigned from the Board of Trustees in January, 1848, the July following Dr. Waddel was elected Professor of Ancient Languages. Urged by officials in his church, in 1857 he reluctantly resigned his chair in the University to accept the Professorship of Ancient Languages in the La Grange, Tenn., Presbyterian Synodical College. When the University was reorganized in 1865, Dr. Waddel was called to the Chancellorship. In 1869 he made a tour of inspection of the leading colleges, North and South, with a view to the reorganization of the curriculum of the University which then led only to the B. A. degree in the academic department. The curriculum of the University of Michigan, with modifications, was, on his recommendation, adopted in 1870, and in its main features is still in force. The days of "reconstruction" came and the University was for several years in great straits. Chancellor Waddel's "Open Letter" in September, 1870, in which he stated that he and his colleagues would resign before they would matriculate negro students, combined with Governor Alcorn's support and the establishment of Alcorn A. and M. College that year, "saved the University." At the commencement of 1873, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the University was celebrated with appropriate exercises. The Board of Trustees published Chancellor Waddel's "Historical Address" in pamphlet form, and requested him to write a "History of the University. When, in June, 1874, he tendered his resignation, the Board for one month declined to accept it, but on his refusal then to withdraw it they elected General Alexander P. Stewart as his successor. As Secretary of Education for the Southern Presbyterian Church from 1874 to 1879 and as Chancellor of the Southwestern Presbyterian University at Clarksville, Tenn., from 1879 to 1888 Dr. Waddel's latter years were full of honor and of blessing to mankind. He died at Birmingham, Alabama, January 9, 1895, having given fifty years of his life to the cause of Southern education, and twenty-two of the best of these years to the University of Mississippi as trustee, professor and chancellor.

GENERAL ALEXANDER P. STEWART, LL.D., F.R.H.S.

General Stewart was born at Rogersville, Tenn., October 2, 1821. He graduated at the U. S. Military Academy in 1842, and from 1843 to 1845 was Assistant Professor of Mathematics in that institution. From 1845 to 1869 he was Professor of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy in Cumberland and Nashville Universities. Commissioned Brigadier General C. S. A. in 1861, he was in command of the Army of Tennessee at the close of the war. In 1866 he was offered the chair of Physics, Astronomy and Civil Engineering in the University of Mississippi, but declined it. He succeeded Dr. Waddel as Chancellor of the University in 1874 and resigned in 1886, the longest term any President or Chancellor had then served. General Stewart was the Southern member of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park Commission from 1890 until his death. Before the Legislature of 1902 he made an eloquent plea for an appropriation for suitable memorials to Mississippi heroes slain on those bloody battle fields. General Stewart assumed the Chancellorship at a trying period. The "reconstruction" ordeal was not yet passed, attendance on the University was decreasing, and its future was not promising. The Law Department had been suspended. In 1877 that department was re-established and tuition in the Academic Department was abolished. As a result of these measures the enrollment in 1877-78 was the highest up to that time in the history of the University, the total being 471, including 259 in the Preparatory Department. The admission of women in 1882 is another important event in General Stewart's administration. Judge A. M. Clayton and Hon. H. M. Sullivan appear to have been the members of the Board of Trustees who proposed and most earnestly advocated this policy. In the management of the finances of the University General Stewart was remarkably systematic and judicious. Military in his bearing, the impersonation of dignity, he was no less affable and sympathetic, deeply concerned for the temporal and spiritual welfare of the students, collectively and individually. This concern was manifested in earnest, private conferences, as well as in his chapel talks and baccalaureate addresses. The writer remembers on his graduating day to have heard Judge H. H. Chalmers say to another member of the Board of Trustees, after Chancellor Stewart had spoken his parting words to the literary graduates and then to the law graduates in lines of thought very different and yet equally excellent, "There is not another man in the State who could make in succession two addresses so similar and yet so different, and both of such high order." He died at Biloxi, Mississippi, August 30, 1908, and was buried in Bellefontaine Cemetery, St. Louis.

EDWARD MAYES, LL.D., F.S.C.

The first chief executive of the University chosen from its alumni, and the only native of the State as yet thus honored, (the present Chancellor excepted), is Hon. Edward Mayes, who was born in Hinds County, Miss., December 15, 1846. He attended Bethany College, Virginia, in 1860-61, served in the Confederate Army in 1864-65, graduated from the literary department of the University of Mississippi in 1868 and from the law department in 1869, was Professor of Law in the University from 1877 to 1892, Chairman of the Faculty 1886-89, Chancellor of the University 1889-92. Among the significant events and improvements during the administration of Chancellor Mayes mention should be made of the following: 1. His great controversy with Senator George on the Endowment Act of 1880, by which the State recognized its indebtedness to the University and provided for the appropriation to it of the annual interest upon this debt. That the settlement was unshaken shows how masterly was Chancellor Mayes' presentation of the University side of the question. 2. Erection of the Library Building, the addition of several thousand dollars' worth of books and the reclassification of the entire library. 3. Renovation of the dormitories and professors' residences. 4. Reorganization of the curriculum in 1889, making the courses for the B.A., B.S. and B.P. degrees more distinctive. 5. Laying of the brick walks on the campus and the purchase of the large new telescope. 6. The tour of the State in the interest of the University made by Chancellor Mayes, and his Chairmanship of the Committee on Bill of Rights in the Constitutional Convention in 1890 also deserve mention among the important events of his administration. As an author Dr. Mayes is entitled to additional distinction. Without enumerating his legal publications, it will be sufficient to refer to his valuable "History of Education in Mississippi" and to his admirable "Life, Times and Speeches of L. Q. C. Lamar." That he was a delegate to the Methodist Ecumenical Conferences of 1891 and 1901 indicates his church relationship and the esteem and confidence entertained toward him by his church. Since his resignation of the Chancellorship, Mr. Mayes has been the attorney of the Illinois Central Railroad before the Supreme Courts. From 1895 to 1900 he was Professor of Law in Millsaps Methodist College, Jackson, Miss. Still in the vigor of manhood, with a national reputation as a lawyer, Ex-Chancellor Mayes, for character, attainments and services, ranks among the most eminent of the sons of Mississippi.

ROBERT BURWELL FULTON, A.M., LL.D.

Dr. R. B. Fulton was born in Sumter County, Alabama, in April, 1849. His father was a successful planter, who believed in giving his sons the best educational opportunities. Dr. Fulton was taught at home until in his thirteenth year he entered an academy at Pleasant Ridge, Greene County, Alabama, where he studied three years until the spring of 1865. In 1865-66 he studied in the private school of Rev. C. M. Hutton and in the fall of 1866 entered the Sophomore class in the University of Mississippi. In 1869 he graduated with the highest rank and first honors in an unusually strong class of twenty-one men.

After an experience of a session and a half in teaching in high schools in Alabama and in New Orleans, he was offered the place of Assistant Professor of Physics and Astronomy in the University, and entered upon the duties of this position March 5, 1871.

He served the University of Mississippi continuously from that date to the time of his resignation in September, 1906, giving the longest period of service of any man ever connected with the Institution. That his service during these years was uniformly successful is shown by the fact that it was rendered under various administrations and under varying conditions, and that it led to continuous promotion. A former professor in the University expressed what is generally known of Chancellor Fulton when he wrote that "with a long term of service ranging from tutorship to chancellorship, no man knows the institution so thoroughly as he, or has labored longer or more successfully for its upbuilding."

Of the more important events and lines of progress that characterized his administration the following may be cited: (1) The abolishing of preparatory classes in 1892; (2) the inauguration in 1893 of summer terms that drew altogether over 2,000 individual teachers to the University; (3) the securing from Congress, by his own initiative and efforts, of a grant of 23,040 acres of land for the University in 1894, which added $10,000 to the annual revenues of the University and which opened the way to other grants to the other colleges of the State, which grants put over $600,000 into the State Treasury for the benefit of these institutions; (4) the development of a system of public and other high schools affiliated with the University, numbering over 80, in which preparation for University classes was given; (5) the enlargement and beautifying of the University grounds, the introduction of waterworks, sewerage, electric lights, steam heating; (6) the repairing of old and the erection of new buildings, and the increase of scientific equipment that more than doubled the value of the plant; (7) the enlargement from a college to a university curriculum by the establishment of departments of Engineering (Civil, Mining and Electrical), Education and Medicine. In 1892 there were 157 University students enrolled, there were 15 professors and instructors, the total annual revenues were less than $40,000, the buildings were dilapidated and the University was in need of all things. During the session 1905-06, the last under his administration, there were enrolled 361 University students, there were 31 professors and instructors, and the total revenues of the University were over $80,000, with other funds available for new buildings to be erected. Besides these improvements, he had, after obtaining the written approval of a majority of the Board, secured, in 1905, the offer of a handsome library from Mr. Andrew Carnegie, which offer was afterwards declined by the Board. He secured from individual friends, in and out of the State, funds for the Summer School, and for prizes and other current needs of the institution.

Chancellor Fulton has been thrice honored with the degree of Doctor of Laws, holding this honor from the University of Nashville, South Carolina College and the University of Alabama. Dr. Fulton has been prominent in all educational work, in and out of the State. He took the initiative in organizing the National Association of State Universities, including the presidents of forty State Universities, and was for five successive years elected president of the Association, which at its meeting in November, 1905, had the presidents of thirty-nine State Universities present. He was president of the Richmond meeting of the Southern Educational Association, and was president of the Department of Higher Education of the National Educational Association at its Los Angeles meeting, of which Association he is a director and a member of the Council. He is a member of a number of scientific societies and a fellow, by election, of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. He is an Elder in the Presbyterian Church and has represented his church on several occasions in the General Assembly and in the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance. He was for years a member of the Executive Committee of the Mississippi Historical Society, and a Trustee of the Department of Archives and History and was an active member of the State commission in charge of the geological survey of Mississippi.

One who was long actively associated with him in the University of Mississippi characterizes him as "scholarly, yet practical; versatile, yet accurate, energetic, tactful and systematic. Chancellor Fulton, in addition to his thorough acquaintance with the history and needs of the University, possesses a combination of gifts and attainments which fits him in a high degree for the office which he has filled so ably."

In his college days Chancellor Fulton was a member of the Chi Psi Fraternity, which has had no chapter at the University for many years. Without bias or prejudice in his administration, he strove to be just to all, and was ever the friend of the poor boy struggling for an education. The Alumni Loan Fund was founded at his instance. Still in full vigor, he has taken up the administration of the affairs of the noted Miller School in Virginia, founded for this class of boys, who have always had his interest and sympathy.

That he had to face and overcome many difficulties in his great work at the University of Mississippi goes without saying. His deep and abiding interest in the main purpose of his work, the advancement of the University of Mississippi in all that makes for the uplift of the State, left no place in his mind for bitterness toward any who differed with him or strove against his work. No change of affairs can mar the record of his achievements for his Alma Mater, every blade of grass and every stone on whose grounds, as well as every person connected with her, he was known to love.

ANDREW ARMSTRONG KINCANNON, A.B., M.S., LL.D.

Over obstacles that few could have surmounted, overcoming opposition at every step that would have daunted a less manly soul, Andrew Armstrong Kincannon has written his name at the top of the roll of Mississippi educators. The very utterance of the name suggests the strength and resoluteness of him who bears it and reminds those who have watched with admiration his steady, upward stride to State and national reputation that the real strength of the man and the chief element of his success has been, not so much his vigorous intellect and clear insight into men and measures, important as these have been, but rather a great warm heart which has enfolded his State, and uniting with his indomitable will has made to him no service too arduous, no sacrifice too great in behalf of the sons and daughters of Mississippi. Space permits a mere outline sketch of a life unusually full of beneficence and honors.

Born in Noxubee County, August 2, 1859, a child amid the gloom and disaster of the early sixties, educated in Lee County in the days of reconstruction, revolution and financial reverses, Andrew Armstrong Kincannon, the second son of James and M. A. Kincannon, early learned the lessons of self-help and self-denial. The impress of both father and mother are easily discernible in his character, and his devotion to his parents and to his brothers and sisters have ever been strikingly manifest.

From the Verona High School, where he was the pupil of both Drs. Deupree and Leavell, of the University faculty, he went to the State University. At the University he was elected anniversarian of the Phi Sigma Literary Society, but resigned and afterward urged a change in the method of selecting the anniversarian. From the University he went to the Normal University, Lebanon, Ohio, from which institution he took both the A.B. and M. S. degrees. At the University and in his difficult early years as teacher in the Verona High School, where he had been a pupil, he gave evidence of that executive ability for which he has later become distinguished.

Three valuable years were spent as assistant professor of English at the Mississippi A. and M. College, under the immediate direction of that prince of English teachers, Dr. W. H. Magruder, and under the general supervision and friendly counsel of Gen. Stephen D. Lee, well termed the "father of industrial education in the South." In 1886, as Superintendent of Meridian Public Schools, A. A. Kincannon came into prominence as a leader in the educational awakening and reorganization of the common schools of the State. He found in Meridian a single, disorganized, unequipped school; in ten years he added five schools and developed a popular, well articulated city school system. During this period his influence in the State Teachers' Association and in county institutes was notably weighty in the promotion of various reforms, and naturally so, being as he was, the founder and head of the first and largest city school system in the State.

It should be mentioned that in 1888 an epoch in his life was made when he was united in marriage with Miss Mary George Barksdale, daughter of William R. Barksdale, of Grenada, Miss., and oldest grandchild of Senator J. Z. George. Thus added incentive to effort came into his life, and with it the sympathy and encouragement of a wife who has always entered fully into his plans and has often proven herself singularly wise and timely in her counsel.

In 1895, after a brilliant canvass, in which he triumphed over a political combination that seemed invincible, Mr. Kincannon was nominated by acclamation for State Superintendent of Education by the largest Democratic Convention ever assembled in Mississippi. In spite of the strong sentiment in the Legislature of 1896 favoring the reduction of the common school fund, the appropriation committee recommending only $700,000, Superintendent Kincannon succeeded in inducing the Legislature to increase the appropriation to $950,000 per annum, and secured also an increased appropriation for summer normals. Of the wholesome school laws that bear his impress mention will be made of only one, the creation of the State Board of Examiners, generally conceded by the best authorities to be a wise statute. Not one of the school laws adopted on his recommendation has ever been repealed. His reports as State Superintendent of Education to the Legislature attracted wide attention on account of their excellence both in subject matter and style. Favorable criticism was evoked from the leading school journals of the United States.

Meanwhile the Industrial Institute and College for the white girls of the State, having passed through years of internal discord and weakness of administration, had reached a crisis in its history. Doubtful indeed, if the Legislature would appropriate funds for its support, as matters then stood, Governor McLaurin, Bishop Galloway and others members of the Board of Trustees urged Superintendent Kincannon as a patriotic Mis-

Mississippian to accept the presidency of the college and save the institution. With his plans for the public school system but beginning to be developed, and expecting no call to other work for years to come, Superintendent Kincannon reluctantly resigned his State office and accepted the presidency of the I. I. and C., having been unanimously elected by the Board of Trustees, responding to the call of duty and the claims of the girls of Mississippi, as the Board presented the case to him. The transformation at once wrought in the college, the doubling in a few years of its faculty and student body, the addition of building after building, and the ready response of successive Legislatures to President Kincannon's eloquent appeals for funds to meet the increasing needs of the great institution, fondly proclaimed by Governor Vardaman and others "the pride of the State," are facts as far famed as the institution, attesting how efficiently President Kincannon met the great demands made upon him, and far surpassed the expectations of the Board and even the best of his friends. So distinguished have been his services to the I. I. and C. that repeatedly has he been called to similar positions in other States. But these have moved him little, for to his own State duty and affection have held him inflexibly firm, supremely loyal.

In November, 1906, he was called to the chancellorship of the State University, but declined to accept it for reasons satisfactory to himself. In June, 1907, Mr. Kincannon was again elected to the chancellorship of the University, and after having had more power conferred upon him than heretofore given to any chancellor, he accepted it.

Chancellor Kincannon holds the LL.D. degree from the University of Arkansas. He has been a Director of the National Education Association, and is now a Director of the Southern Educational Association. He has also served as a member of the State Board of Examiners.

Of the important events and improvements which have marked the opening years of Chancellor Kincannon's administration, the following may be enumerated: 1. The "honor system" has been crystalized and rendered more effective by the creation of an Honor Council representative of the entire student body. 2. A Student Bureau of Self Help has been successfully inaugurated. 3. The Legislature of 1908 made the University the largest appropriation in the latter's history. As results, a large, handsome and thoroughly equipped dormitory for men, a commodious and beautiful dining hall and a new power house have been built; the light and heat distributing systems have been renewed and enlarged; and about one-half mile of wide concrete walks have been laid where most needed on the campus. 5. Plans have been drawn and most of the necessary funds secured for a magnificent new library building. 6. A Department of Pharmacy has been established and has been in most successful operation since the opening of the session of 1908-09. 7. While the first two years of a regular four-year course in Medicine have been given since 1903, not until the beginning of the session of 1909-10 were the last two years added. The second half of the complete course is now being offered to a fine body of students at Vicksburg in connection with the State Charity Hospital of that city. This property, valued at $150,000, was acquired by the University in 1908. Five full professors and nine assistants are engaged in the work of instruction at Vicksburg. 8. The attendance has continued to increase until there are at this time, November, 1909, very nearly five hundred students enrolled. Chancellor Kincannon has more than met expectations and bids fair to place the University of Mississippi higher yet in the educational roll of the country.

Note.—The change from the close curriculum to the University system in 1872 renders a new and different classification of students necessary. The following lists contain the names of all new students admitted during the session ending in the year stated, and of all the graduates of each year. The names of the graduates of 1875 or 1876, and all succeeding years, are therefore found twice in the lists—once as new students, then as graduates.

NAMES OF STUDENTS.

This alphabetical list contains the names of all students from the opening of the University in 1848 to the end of the session of 1908-09. The total number of individual students enrolled in all departments during this period is 6,398. The total number of individual graduates (alumni) is 1,650. (This does not include those receiving honorary degrees.) The aggregate number of academic and professional degrees and department diplomas conferred, 1,801, exceeds the number of alumni for the reason that some received both a Bachelor's degree and the Master of Arts, others graduated both in the Academic Department and a Professional Department, while a few took three degrees.

The date following each name shows one year in which the student attended the University, and further information may be had by consulting the lists for that year in this catalogue. The abbreviated date (e. g., '68) indicates that the student graduated in this year. The Letter "L" before a date indicates that the student was in the Law Department. When the letter "G," in parenthesis, follows a name the meaning is that the student registered for graduate work during the session indicated. (See list of Graduate Students, page 325.)

In the revision of this alphabetical list, as also in the preparation of the statistical table which precedes it, the editor has exercised care and has made use of all information available.
